though the use may be incidental<sup>24</sup> and without the consent or knowledge of the participants charged.<sup>25</sup> Although the scheme may have been carefully designed to avoid using the mails altogether, if, in the execution of the scheme, the mails are in fact used, the act is violated,<sup>26</sup> but it has been held that, where use of the mails could not reasonably have been foreseen, accused is not guilty of causing the mails to be used.<sup>27</sup>

(b) Time and Number of Mailings

Each separate use of the mails in the execution of a continuing scheme constitutes a separate and distinct offense. Use of the mails after the fruits of the fraud have been received, for the purpose of retaining them, is within the purview of the mail-fraud statute, but use of the mails after the scheme has been completed or abandoned does not violate the statute.

While the scheme or plan to defraud by use of the mails must be planned or devised before the actual use of the mails,<sup>28</sup> its consummation may be brought about by one or many mailings.<sup>29</sup> Each separate use of the mails in the execution of a continuing scheme constitutes a separate and distinct offense.<sup>30</sup> A letter which is mailed as merely a step in a general scheme to defraud at an early stage in the proceedings, although not in furtherance of the execution of the final scheme, is nevertheless within the scope of the statute.<sup>31</sup> The use of the mails, even after the fruits of the fraud have been received, for the purpose of assisting in retaining them,<sup>32</sup> or to lull the victim into a false

"Knowingly," within mail-fraud statute, does not involve absolute knowledge or intent, but it is sufficient if use of mails may fairly be foreseen by defendant as step in execution of scheme to defraud, or that steps in causal chain resulting in delivery through mails should have been knowingly set on foot.—U. S. v. Weisman, C.C.A.N.Y., 83 F.2d 470, certiorari denied Weisman v. U. S., 57 S.Ct. 22, 299 U.S. 560, 81 L.Ed. 412, rehearing denied 57 S.Ct. 113, 299 U.S. 621, 81 L.Ed. 457.

Checks deposited in bank

(1) One who deposited check in bank for collection became liable for every link in the chain of events which he had set in motion which reasonably or ordinarily required use of mails to complete the transaction including the use of the mails by the correspondent bank in New York to notify collecting bank that item had been paid.—Moffitt v. sense of security<sup>33</sup> and inaction,<sup>34</sup> or to restore confidence and allay discontent,<sup>35</sup> or to postpone discovery,<sup>36</sup> or to stimulate active support for the enterprise,<sup>37</sup> is within the purview of the statute.

The use of the mails after the scheme has been completed or abandoned is not a use for the purpose of executing the scheme and, therefore, the statute is not violated.<sup>38</sup>

(c) Person to Whom Mail Directed

Under the mail-fraud statute it is immaterial to what person the mail is sent.

If matter is mailed in execution of, or by way of, an attempt to execute a scheme to defraud, an offense is committed under the mail-fraud statute, and it is immaterial to what person it is sent.<sup>39</sup> Accordingly it is not necessary that the mails be used in communicating with the person or persons intended to be defrauded,<sup>40</sup> and it is sufficient if it is mailed to another in furtherance of the scheme.<sup>41</sup> The sending through the mails of letters by several accused persons to each other may constitute the offense,<sup>42</sup> and one who causes a letter to be delivered by mail to himself pursuant to a fraudulent scheme commits the offense.<sup>43</sup> The taking of a letter by accused from the post office, although it was mailed to him by his agent, is sufficient as a basis for a prosecution under the statute if the letter is otherwise of the character condemned thereby.<sup>44</sup>

(d) Mailing by Agents or Employees

Mailing of letters by agents or employees of the accused in furtherance of his scheme to defraud is sufficient to establish violation of the mail-fraud statute by the accused.

Lulling communication

The rule that sending of a lulling communication through the mails after defrauded party has parted with money constitutes an offense within mail-frauds statute is applicable only where the scheme is continuing and the communication is transmitted by mail during its existence, or where the scheme contemplates and consists of several parts and the mails are used in furtherance of it before it is fully completed—Mitchell v. therance of a scheme to defraud within the purview of the mail-fraud statute, accused need not personally have mailed the letters;<sup>45</sup> it is sufficient if the letters have been mailed by agents or employees of accused in furtherance of his scheme to defraud.<sup>46</sup> Responsibility cannot be avoided by the use of an innocent agency intentionally employed to reach and use the mails in effecting a scheme to defraud.<sup>47</sup>

(c) Nature and Contents of Matter Mailed

In order that an offense under the mail-fraud statute may be committed, the matter mailed must have some relation to, and must be a step in the execution or attempted execution of, the scheme or artifice to defraud.

In order that an offense under the mail-fraud statute may be committed, the matter mailed must have some relation to, and must be a step in the execution or attempted execution of, the scheme or artifice to defraud.<sup>48</sup> It is not necessary to a conviction under the statute that the letter or other matter mailed in furtherance of the scheme to defraud should, on its face or by its terms, contain anything criminal or objectionable,<sup>49</sup> disclose a fraudulent purpose,<sup>50</sup> or show that it was in furtherance of a scheme to defraud;<sup>51</sup> and it is of no importance whether the contents thereof are true or false.<sup>52</sup> The matter mailed may be wholly innocuous in itself, and yet be evidentiary of the crime charged.<sup>53</sup> All that is necessary is that the letter mailed be designed or calculated to aid or assist in the execution or attempted execution of a scheme to defraud already devised.<sup>54</sup>

Signature. Accused may be guilty of the offense, although he has not personally signed the letter.<sup>55</sup>

d. Persons Liable

All who with criminal intent join themselves to the principal scheme to defraud by use of the mails may be guilty of violation of the statute, and each party is liable for the acts of the other parties.

In order to render one liable to a prosecution under the statute it is not necessary that he should former participant, who has ended his association with the fraudulent scheme long before the mails were used, is not an aider or abettor under the statute.<sup>65</sup>

While a corporate officer who devises a scheme to obtain money by false pretenses or promises and uses the mails in furtherance of such scheme is guilty of a violation of the statute,<sup>66</sup> a managing officer of a corporation cannot be convicted of using the mails to defraud if he did not know of, or participate in, the scheme,<sup>67</sup> no matter how careless and negligent he may have been in the management of the affairs of the corporation.<sup>68</sup>

e. Defenses

As a general rule, in a prosecution for violation of the mail-fraud statute, the accused may interpose as a defense any matter which constitutes a bar to the prosecution or a legal excuse or justification for the act.

As a general rule, in a prosecution for violation of the mail-fraud statute, accused may interpose as a defense any matter which constitutes a bar to the prosecution or a legal excuse or justification for the act.<sup>69</sup> Matters which do not constitute a bar to the prosecution or which do not constitute a legal excuse or justification for the act are not available as a defense.<sup>70</sup> Ordinarily, good faith of accused is a complete defense,<sup>71</sup> but an honest belief in the success of an enterprise does not excuse or justify fraudulent representations or activities.<sup>72</sup>

Scheme obnoxious to state laws. It is not an objection to a prosecution under the statute that the scheme to carry out which the assistance of the mails is to be invoked is obnoxious to some state law,<sup>73</sup> or that it is of a character responsible to the police powers of the state only,<sup>74</sup> and has no

49 C.J. p 1209 note 53—p 1210 note 58.

Receipt of letter

The act of one in receiving a letter in the execution of the scheme is the act of all.—Grant v. U. S., C.C.A.Ky., 268 F. 443, certiorari denied 41 S.Ct. 538, 256 U.S. 700, 65 L.Ed. 1178.

Change from express and telegraph to mails

Where accused had been a party to a scheme to defraud during a period when the persons conducting it had done so solely by means of express and telegraph companies, and was not shown to have had any connection with his former confederates after they commenced unlawfully to use the mails for such purpose, he was not guilty of a violation of the statute.—Dalton v. U. S., Ill., 154 F. 461, 83 C.C.A. 317.

68. U.S.—Foster v. U. S., supra.

69. True representations

Where defendants were charged with use of mails in executing scheme to defraud based on sale of compound as cure for certain disease or ailment, offense charged was not committed if compound constituted cure or remedy for disease or ailment as represented.—West v. U. S., C.C.A.Colo., 68 F.2d 96.

70. Matters not constituting defense

(1) In prosecution for using mails to defraud in sale of gold mine stock, if letters were mailed in execution of scheme to defraud, it was no defense that thereafter company was successful in that and other ventures.—Little v. U. S., C.C.A.Colo., 73 F.2d 861, 96 A.L.R. 889.

(2) Fact that defendant's conviction for embezzlement under a state statute was reversed by state supreme court was not a defense to indictment under mail fraud statute.—Dunham v. U. S., C.C.A.Fla., 125 F.2d 895.

(3) That the mails were employed in executing a part of a scheme to defraud immediately after it was devised, and at various times before entire scheme was completely devised, was no defense.—Weiss v. U. S., C.C.A.La., 122 F.2d 675, certiorari denied 62 S.Ct. 300, 314 U.S. 687, 86 L.Ed. 550, rehearing denied 62 S.Ct. 478, 314 U.S. 716, 86 L.Ed. 570.

(4) The fact that a partnership relation exists between person committing offense and person to be defrauded does not absolve former from criminal responsibility.—Stryker v. U. S., C.C.A.Colo., 95 F.2d 601.

(5) Where indictment for using mails to defraud charged scheme to palm off to customers enticed into defendants' store by false advertising, cheap, shoddy suits as suits advertised as having value greater than actual value and as being obtainable at special price because purchaser's deposit had been forfeited, that prospective customers had opportunity to inspect suits before purchasing did not prevent scheme from being fraudulent.—Rude v. U. S., C.C.A.Colo., 74 F.2d 673.

Scheme by election commissioners

Mere fact that alleged scheme or artifice to defraud originated with respect to, and in course of, dis-

relation to any law of the United States,<sup>75</sup> since the prosecution is for using the mails in executing a scheme to defraud.<sup>76</sup>

Use of decoy letters. The fact that letters taken from a post office pursuant to a scheme to defraud were decoy letters does not render their receipt any less an offense, if they were written in an effort to detect, and not to induce the commission of, a crime;<sup>77</sup> but, if there were no reasonable grounds to suspect defendants of misusing the mails, neither the course of the officials nor the conviction can be sanctioned.<sup>78</sup>

§ 50. — Indictment

b. Statement of scheme to defraud

charge of defendants' duties as primary election commissioners did not relieve defendants of criminal responsibility on ground that since it was policy of congress to leave conduct of election of its members to state laws, administered by state officers, defendants could not be charged and tried for crime denounced by statute punishing use of mails to promote frauds.—U. S. v. Classic, D.C.La., 35 F.Supp. 457.

a. In General

An indictment for violation of the mail-fraud statute must state the nature of the accusation and the facts essential to constitute the offense with sufficient certainty and definiteness to enable the accused to prepare his defense and to plead any judgment in bar of a further prosecution therefor.

In accordance with the rules applicable in criminal prosecutions generally, an indictment for violation of the mail-fraud statute must state the nature of the accusation and the facts essential to constitute the offense with sufficient certainty and definiteness to enable accused to prepare his defense and to plead any judgment in bar of a further prosecution therefor.<sup>79</sup> When this is done, the indictment is sufficient,<sup>80</sup> and it will not be held insufficient by reason of purely formal defects.<sup>81</sup> The indictment need only allege the elements specified in the statute.<sup>82</sup> It need not allege the violation of a particular statute,<sup>83</sup> or follow the language of the statute if the averments bring the charge within the substance and true meaning of the statute.<sup>84</sup>

Bill of particulars. In accordance with the rule in criminal prosecutions generally, accused is entitled to a bill of particulars where the charges are so general in their nature that they do not fully advise him of the specific acts with which he is charged so that he may properly prepare his defense.<sup>85</sup> An indefinite description of the matter mailed is a proper ground for requesting a bill of particulars.<sup>86</sup> The court need not require the government to give additional information unless it is necessary to protect the rights of accused.<sup>87</sup>

Persons accused. The person accused should be properly designated or identified,<sup>88</sup> and it is improper to couple an alias with the real name of accused where there is no question of identity.<sup>89</sup> Since each party to a scheme to defraud is an agent of the entire group, as discussed supra § 49, an allegation which charges an act by one of the parties acting in concert with the others is sufficient to charge all the parties to the scheme with the commission of the act.<sup>90</sup> The failure to name a participant in a scheme to defraud in one indictment does not estop the government to prosecute such participant under a subsequent indictment.<sup>91</sup> hearing denied 65 S.Ct. 1399, 325 U.S. 894, 89 L.Ed. 2005—Wagner v. U. S., C.C.A.Fla., 110 F.2d 595, certiorari denied 60 S.Ct. 1104, 310 U.S. 643, 84 L.Ed. 1411—Spivey v. U. tains no restriction as to the number of counts an indictment may contain<sup>92</sup> or the period within which the several offenses charged must have been committed.<sup>93</sup>

Negating matter of defense. In accordance with the rules in criminal prosecutions generally, the indictment need not negative matters of defense.<sup>94</sup>

Matters of evidence. The indictment need not allege evidentiary facts<sup>95</sup> or set out evidence to show the manner in which the scheme to defraud would be made effective.<sup>96</sup>

Surplusage. As in other prosecutions, surplusage will not vitiate an indictment for using the mails to defraud, and may be disregarded.<sup>97</sup>

b. Statement of Scheme to Defraud

- (2) Description of scheme
- (3) Representations used
- (4) Designation of persons

(1) In General

An indictment for violation of the mail-fraud statute must allege that a scheme of the character denounced by the statute was devised or intended to be devised. It need not allege success of the scheme.

An indictment for violation of the mail-fraud statute must allege that a scheme of the character denounced by the statute was devised or intended to be devised;<sup>98</sup> and for this purpose, it is sufficient to allege that accused on a given day had devised a scheme to defraud.<sup>99</sup> The indictment must state facts which show that there was something of value, within the meaning of the statute, of which the named victim could be defrauded.<sup>1</sup>

It is not necessary that the scheme set out in the indictment should appear to be fraudulent on its face,<sup>2</sup> and an indictment which describes the entire scheme as devised and charges it to be in some, but not in all, essential respects fraudulent is not defective.<sup>3</sup> An indictment is not insufficient as showing only a preparation to devise a scheme to defraud because ways and means for carrying it into effect were subsequently to be devised,<sup>4</sup> and it has been held that an indictment is not rendered bad by the fact that allegations show that representations made were inconsistent with each other.<sup>5</sup> Where an indictment sufficiently charges a scheme or artifice to defraud, the fact that it also added

Civil or political rights

An indictment charging that defendants used the mails in furtherance of a scheme to defraud by making false primary election returns is demurrable in the absence of a showing that by the alleged scheme the persons to be defrauded were or could have been deprived of money or property of some value other than mere civil or political rights.—U. the words "in and by inducing by false and fraudulent representations and pretenses" persons to part with their money does not limit the government to the common-law offense of obtaining money or property by false pretenses.<sup>6</sup>

Intent to defraud. Since an intent to defraud is a necessary element of the offense, it is essential that the indictment allege an intent to defraud;<sup>7</sup> and this may be done by stating facts from which such intent must be necessarily inferred,<sup>8</sup> without the use of the word "intent."<sup>9</sup>

Success of scheme. The indictment need not allege the success of the scheme<sup>10</sup> or that the objects of the scheme were actually accomplished,<sup>11</sup> or that anyone had actually lost money or had been defrauded by the execution of the scheme alleged through the use of the mails.<sup>12</sup>

Benefit accruing to accused. It is not necessary to allege in the indictment that accused expected to,<sup>13</sup> or did,<sup>14</sup> benefit from the execution of the scheme to defraud, or that he intended to, or did, convert the money obtained by the execution of such scheme to his own use.<sup>15</sup> If an intention to convert is charged, it is unnecessary to specify the manner in which the conversion was accomplished.<sup>16</sup>

(2) Description of Scheme

The scheme should be charged with sufficient particularity to enable the accused to know the charge against him and to protect himself against further prosecution for the same offense.

The indictment must describe the alleged scheme with such certainty as clearly to inform accused of the charge against him, and of the nature of the evidence to be adduced in proof of the execution of the scheme,<sup>17</sup> by direct and positive averment, and not inferentially;<sup>18</sup> and an indictment which fails to meet this requirement is defective in substance and is not aided or cured by verdict.<sup>19</sup> Nevertheless, it is only essential to charge the scheme with such particularity as will enable accused to know the charge against him and what he will be required to meet on the trial,<sup>20</sup> and that the indict-

Bill of particulars

In charging the use of the mails to defraud, where the scheme is set out in the indictment with a degree of certainty sufficient to show its existence and character and fairly to acquaint defendant with the particular fraudulent scheme charged against him, but defendant is entitled to further identification or specification, his remedy is to apply for ment be such as will avoid another prosecution for the same offense.<sup>21</sup> It is not necessary that the scheme be set forth with that particularity as to time, place, and circumstance which would be required if the scheme itself, and not the use of the post office in the execution thereof, was the gist of the offense,<sup>22</sup> or with the detail and particularity necessary in an indictment for the specific offense of obtaining property through false representations,<sup>23</sup> or an indictment for swindling or a like crime.<sup>24</sup>

The indictment should disclose the facts or elements which constitute the scheme or artifice,<sup>25</sup> and an indictment which merely uses the words of the statute in setting out the scheme, without alleging the particulars which constitute the scheme, is insufficient.<sup>26</sup> If the allegations as a whole describe the scheme to defraud, it is not necessary that each paragraph of a count describe the offense.<sup>27</sup> It is also unnecessary for the indictment to identify each defendant with the particular role that he was to take in the execution of the

Executed scheme

An indictment is not fatally defective because it charges an executed scheme by alleging that defendant falsely represented or pretended certain things, instead of alleging that it was the plan that defendant would falsely represent and pretend such things.—U. scheme.<sup>28</sup>

Reference for description to another count. An indictment, which sets out the scheme in detail in the first count, may in other counts describe it by reference to the first.<sup>29</sup> If the incorporation by reference of the alleged scheme is sufficiently clear and specific, the indictment will be sufficient, even though the count describing the scheme is quashed.<sup>30</sup>

(3) Representations. Used

The particular false representation made or contemplated in furtherance of the scheme should be alleged, and its falsity should be pointed out. The indictment must allege that the accused had knowledge of the falsity of the representations, and that such knowledge existed at the time the mails were used.

The particular false representation made or contemplated in furtherance of the scheme should be alleged,<sup>31</sup> and its falsity should be pointed out,<sup>32</sup> at least where there is no averment of any intent to convert the moneys obtained to accused's own use;<sup>33</sup> but the allegations with respect to the false representations need not be made with the high degree of particularity or certainty requisite in charging unlawful use of the mails.<sup>34</sup> The indictment need not expressly allege that the false representations were an integral part of the scheme to defraud where such fact is necessarily inferred.<sup>35</sup> When the alleged transactions, as conducted, sufficiently constitute false representations, the lack of an allegation of a particular false representation in words is immaterial.<sup>36</sup> More than one false representation may be charged as long as they are part of the same scheme.<sup>37</sup>

Since it is the devising or intending to devise the scheme which constitutes the element of the offense, it is not necessary to allege that the representations which the scheme contemplated would be made were actually made<sup>38</sup> directly to any person or class of persons.<sup>39</sup>

Knowledge of falsity. The indictment must allege that accused had knowledge of the falsity of the representations made by him in furtherance of the scheme to defraud,<sup>40</sup> and that such knowledge existed at the time the mails were used for the purpose of executing the scheme.<sup>41</sup> The omission of an allegation of this character, it is said, is one of matter of substance, and not a defect of form only.<sup>42</sup>

(4) Designation of Persons

The indictment should describe by name the individuals intended to be defrauded, or charge a scheme to could be cured by furnishing a bill of particulars.—U. S. v. Palmieri, C. C.N.Y., 169 F. 490—49 C.J. p 1213 note 18, p 1214 note 19.

defraud the public generally, or a class of persons not capable of being resolved into individuals.

If the indictment does not charge a scheme to defraud the public generally, or a class not capable of being resolved into individuals, but clearly imports an intention to defraud definite individuals, it must describe them by name,<sup>43</sup> or give a good and true reason for the omission,<sup>44</sup> as that such names are to the grand jury unknown.<sup>45</sup> An indictment is not defective as failing to give the names of the individuals intended to be defrauded or to allege that they were not known where it alleges that the scheme was to defraud, not an individual or group of individuals, but the general public or a class of persons not resolvable into individuals.<sup>46</sup> It is sufficient to allege that defendant devised or intended to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud generally, and set forth only the names of the intended victims if known, or, if unknown, then the class of persons to be defrauded.<sup>47</sup> An indictment alleging a scheme to defraud the public generally and also certain persons therein named sufficiently describes the persons to be defrauded.<sup>48</sup> An indictment is not insufficient because it restricts the class of persons to be defrauded to ignorant persons;<sup>49</sup> It is sufficient if the purpose was to defraud any person or persons whomsoever.<sup>50</sup>

Persons who were defrauded. It is not necessary to allege the names of the persons who parted with money or property in reliance on the representations,<sup>51</sup> especially where the allegations of the indictment cannot be construed as charging accused with intending to defraud only those persons who were induced to part with their money.<sup>52</sup> The use of the term "victims," in describing the persons alleged to be defrauded, is not prejudicial.<sup>53</sup>

Persons receiving mail. The statute does not require the names of the persons to whom delivery of the mail is made to be stated.<sup>54</sup>

Fictitious persons

In prosecution for using mails in furtherance of scheme to defraud by representing that defendants had discovered and were applying, at their hospitals, a sure cure for certain diseases and ailments, the fact that in two counts defendants were charged with having caused the mail matter to be delivered to fictitious names employed by post office inspectors was not material.—Baker v. U. S., supra.

plead the mailing of the matter with great certainty as to time, place, and circumstance, where that is necessary in order to advise accused of the exact nature of the accusation against him, so that he may properly prepare his defense, and be able to make use of a conviction or acquittal as a protection against any further prosecution for the same offense.<sup>56</sup> An allegation which specifically charges the use of the mails and that the scheme was one which reasonably contemplated the use of the mails may be sufficient,<sup>57</sup> and it need not definitely state accused's connection with the mailing of the matter.<sup>58</sup> Under an indictment alleging that accused caused a certain letter to be delivered by mail, it was held not necessary to allege how, or in what way, or by what means, accused caused the letter to be mailed.<sup>59</sup> An allegation that accused deposited, or caused to be deposited, a letter or packet in the post office<sup>60</sup> or in an authorized depository for mail matter in a stated city,<sup>61</sup> that accused took or received a letter or packet from the post office,<sup>62</sup> or that accused caused matter to be delivered by mail,<sup>63</sup> sufficiently charges use of the mails, and it has been held that an indictment which charges that accused caused to be advertised in a newspaper as of a certain date a scheme to defraud subscribers is not fatally defective, although it fails to allege the time when the newspaper was placed in the mails.<sup>64</sup> It is not necessary to use the word "knowingly" in charging the depositing of letters in the mails in execution of a scheme to defraud, where this is necessarily implied from the other averments.<sup>65</sup>

Failure of the indictment to allege the date when the scheme for using the mails to defraud was devised does not vitiate the indictment on the ground that, for all that appears, the offense charged was barred or could have been barred by the statute of limitations, where the indictment shows that the letters in furtherance of the scheme were written and mailed within the period prescribed by the statute for prosecutions for using the mails to defraud.<sup>66</sup> For the same reason an indictment which alleges the devising of the scheme on one date and the use of the mails on another is not objectionable as charging the commission of the offense on two separate dates.<sup>67</sup> An indictment which alleges that a scheme was formed on a designated date and continued and consummated from day to day until another designated date charges but one scheme to defraud.<sup>68</sup> An indictment which shows that the mailing did not take place until after the scheme was consummated does not charge an offense under the statute.<sup>69</sup>

Intent to execute by use of mails. It is not necessary to allege that accused intended as a part of the scheme to use the mail to carry out the purposes of the scheme,<sup>70</sup> as was the case under an earlier statute.<sup>71</sup>

(2) Nature and Contents of Matter Mailed

It is not necessary to set out in the indictment the contents of the matter mailed provided it is sufficiently identified.

While it has been said that it would be better pleading to set out in the indictment the contents of the letters or other matter deposited in the mails in furtherance of the scheme to defraud,<sup>72</sup> the courts have uniformly held that it is not necessary, to the sufficiency of the indictment, to do so,<sup>73</sup> provided the letter or other matter is sufficiently identified.<sup>74</sup> It is not necessary to descend into particulars in describing the communication<sup>75</sup> or to identify it so specifically that no other communication would fit the description.<sup>76</sup> The indictment need not allege specifically that the letters or other communications had any directions thereon.<sup>77</sup> It is unnecessary to allege that the letter was inclosed in an envelope<sup>78</sup> on which was placed the proper postage,<sup>79</sup> since the term "letter," when used in the indictment, signifies a communication inclosed, sealed, and stamped, and being carried as first-class mail.<sup>80</sup> In like manner, it is unnecessary to allege that postal cards were official government postal cards<sup>81</sup> or that accused had placed proper postage on them.<sup>82</sup>

In accordance with principles considered, supra § 49 c (3), the letter or other writing set out in the indictment must have had some relation to the scheme,<sup>83</sup> and it must have been deposited in the mail with the intent of assisting in carrying the scheme into effect;<sup>84</sup> but the fact that a letter does not show on its face that it was sent in furtherance of the scheme does not render the indictment insufficient.<sup>85</sup> The indictment need not show in what way the letter could have aided in carrying out the scheme;<sup>86</sup> it is enough to allege that it was mailed in the execution of the scheme,<sup>87</sup> unless the letter or writing clearly shows on its face that it probably could not have had any effect in the furtherance of the scheme.<sup>88</sup>

The indictment need not allege that the matter mailed in furtherance of the scheme indicated on its face an intent to defraud,<sup>89</sup> or that it was calculated to be effective in carrying out the scheme,<sup>90</sup> or that the contents of the letter or other matter mailed in furtherance of the scheme to defraud were false.<sup>91</sup> Where the indictment alleges

d. Issues, Proof, and Variance

While it is not necessary to prove every averment in the indictment in a prosecution for using the mails to defraud, all the material allegations must be proved.

While it is not necessary to prove every averment in the indictment in a prosecution for using the mails to defraud,<sup>93</sup> all the material allegations must be proved.<sup>94</sup> The existence of the scheme must be proved substantially as alleged in the indictment.<sup>95</sup> It is sufficient to prove, in accordance with allegations in the indictment, that there was a scheme to defraud, that the mails were used or caused to be used in furtherance of the scheme, and that the scheme was one which reasonably contemplated the use of the mails,<sup>96</sup> and, if this is shown, it is unnecessary to prove accused's connection with the mailing of the matter.<sup>97</sup> A specific intent to defraud need not be shown where an intent to defraud is obvious from the nature of the scheme itself.<sup>98</sup> In the absence of an express allegation in the indictment that defendants intended to defraud every one who deposited money with them, the government is not bound to prove such an intent,<sup>99</sup> but it is otherwise where the indictment expressly alleges that defendants intended to defraud every one with whom they dealt, since, in these circumstances, the government is bound to prove the charge as made.<sup>1</sup> Trivial details or matters need not be proved.<sup>2</sup>

Where the scheme is made up of many elements, it is essential to prove a sufficient number of the elements of the scheme, so that the jury may be justified in finding the existence of the scheme;<sup>3</sup> but no particular element need be proved, if the other elements, when proved, are sufficient to establish the scheme.<sup>4</sup> It is not necessary to prove every misrepresentation charged in the indictment,<sup>5</sup> but it will be sufficient if enough of the misrepresentations to prove the scheme are shown.<sup>6</sup>

Evidence admissible under pleadings. General rules relating to the admissibility of evidence under pleadings in criminal prosecutions, as discussed in Indictments and Informations § 253, apply in prosecutions for use of the mails to defraud.<sup>7</sup> Evidence of the mailing of letters other than those set out in the indictment, but of similar character, is admissible to show the character of the scheme<sup>8</sup> and its participants,<sup>9</sup> or to show intent to defraud.<sup>10</sup>

Variance. General rules, as discussed in Indictments and Informations §§ 254-270, govern as to what constitutes,<sup>11</sup> and what does not constitute,<sup>12</sup> a variance. Where the continuity of a scheme is relied on, the government is not limited strictly, in point of time, to the starting point it chooses to designate in the indictment,<sup>13</sup> although the government may circumscribe itself to the period it chooses through the evidence it offers.<sup>14</sup> Defendant cannot be convicted on evidence sufficient to sustain an offense not charged,<sup>15</sup> although such offense is equally within the statute.<sup>16</sup>

If the indictment charges a specific scheme for a specific purpose, then proof of the use of the mails after the purpose has been achieved will not authorize a conviction.<sup>17</sup>

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

General rules in criminal prosecutions apply as to presumptions in prosecutions for using the mails to defraud. The burden is on the government to prove the essential elements of the offense.

General rules in criminal prosecutions, as discussed in Criminal Law §§ 579-599, apply as to presumptions in prosecutions for using the mails to defraud.<sup>18</sup> There is no presumption that a scheme to defraud, once established, continues to exist.<sup>19</sup> In a prosecution for using the mails to defraud, the burden is on the government to prove the essential elements of the offense.<sup>20</sup> The bur-

17. U.S.—Mitchell v. U. S., C.C.A.N.M., 118 F.2d 653.

Lulling communication

The indictment must charge a continuing scheme or a scheme which consists of several parts, and the proof must show that the communication was sent during the existence of the scheme, before proof of a lulling communication, sent after a person has parted with something of value, will authorize a conviction.—Mitchell v. U. S., supra.

49 C.J. p 1217 note 90.

Knowledge of falsity

In prosecution for using mails to defraud in stock sale scheme, there is presumption that president, chief stockholder, and active head of corporation knew of falsity of financial statement.—Hyney v. U. S., C.C.A.Mich., 44 F.2d 134, certiorari denied 51 S.Ct. 347, 283 U.S. 824, 75 L.Ed. 1438.

Participation in formation of scheme

Defendant accused of using mails to defraud is conclusively presumed to have known that it was unnecessary that he should in first instance have participated in formation of scheme to defraud.—Cochran v. U. S., C.C.A.Minn., 41 F.2d 193.

19. U.S.—Merrill v. U. S., C.C.A.Mont., 95 F.2d 669.

den is on the government to prove a scheme to defraud,<sup>21</sup> the essential elements of the scheme,<sup>22</sup> falsity of the statements and representations,<sup>23</sup> defendant's knowing participation in the crime,<sup>24</sup> an intent to defraud,<sup>25</sup> the use of the mails in furtherance of the fraudulent scheme,<sup>26</sup> and that the mailing was done within the jurisdiction of the court in which the prosecution is had.<sup>27</sup> The prosecution must prove that the transaction, in furtherance of which the mails were used, was part of a scheme in which defendant was implicated,<sup>28</sup> although it is not necessary to prove that defendant had any part in the immediate transaction<sup>29</sup> or knew of each individual and minute act in the execution of the scheme.<sup>30</sup> Where there is other evidence sufficient to connect accused with the scheme and its execution, the government need not prove that accused personally wrote the letters<sup>31</sup> or mailed them.<sup>32</sup>

The burden of proof is on the prosecution throughout the trial, and does not shift during the trial.<sup>33</sup> Once the existence of a scheme has been established, defendant does not have the burden of showing its termination,<sup>34</sup> since the prosecution has the burden of proving that the scheme was still in existence when the mails were used.<sup>35</sup>

It is not necessary for the government to prove that there was an intent on the part of defendants to execute their fraudulent scheme by the use of the mails,<sup>36</sup> that the matter sent through the mails was calculated to be effective in carrying out the scheme,<sup>37</sup> that every step of the scheme was accomplished,<sup>38</sup> that the representations which the scheme contemplated would be made were actually made,<sup>39</sup> or that the scheme was successful.<sup>40</sup> The government need not prove either the existence or extent of damage to the victims.<sup>41</sup>

(1) In General

In prosecutions for use of the mails to defraud, great latitude is allowed in the introduction of evidence, and any evidence which is competent, material, and relevant on any issue or phase of the case is properly admitted.

In prosecutions for use of the mails to defraud, great latitude is allowed in the introduction of evidence,<sup>42</sup> and any evidence which is competent, material, and relevant on any issue or phase of the case is properly admitted.<sup>43</sup> The fact that such evidence might tend to establish defendant's guilt of another offense does not render it inadmissible.<sup>44</sup>

Under the general rules in criminal prosecutions, incompetent, immaterial, or irrelevant evidence is properly excluded.<sup>45</sup>

(2) Scheme to Defraud and Execution Thereof

Any competent, relevant, and material evidence having a tendency to prove or disprove the scheme, or the methods of its execution, is admissible.

Consequence of losses

In prosecution for use of mails in scheme to manipulate stock without regard to its real value, admitting testimony of persons who had sustained losses through buying such stock to effect that in consequence of losses some buyers had lost homes and business and gone hopelessly into debt, that losses went into millions, and that one victim had committed suicide, was held error as exceeding permissible limits of such evidence.—U. S. v. Brown, C.C.A.N.Y., 79 F.2d 321, certiorari denied McCarthy v. U. S., 56 S.Ct. 309, 296 U.S. 650, 80 L.Ed. 462.

in the discretion of the trial court.<sup>48</sup> Any competent, relevant, and material evidence having a tendency to prove<sup>49</sup> or disprove<sup>50</sup> the scheme, or the methods of its execution,<sup>51</sup> is admissible. Competent and relevant evidence may properly be admitted to show the representations made<sup>52</sup> and the falsity thereof,<sup>53</sup> good faith or knowledge of the falsity of the representations,<sup>54</sup> the success of the scheme,<sup>55</sup> and the age and status of the victims of the scheme.<sup>56</sup> Testimony as to events relating to the scheme, but occurring before the time allowed for commencing prosecutions, is admissible where, within that time, mails had been used in furtherance of the scheme.<sup>57</sup>

(3) Intent

Any competent, relevant, and material evidence tending to prove or disprove a fraudulent intent is admissible.

Widows and orphans

In prosecution for using mails to sell building and loan association stock and to receive deposits therein on fraudulent representations that accounts were guaranteed by the government, reiteration during trial of fact that many depositors were widows and orphans was not error.—Norman v. largely within the discretion of the trial judge.<sup>60</sup> A defendant should be permitted to offer any evidence which bears directly and not too remotely on his intention,<sup>61</sup> and the court should not exclude any evidence offered by defendant which tends to refute the fraudulent intent charged.<sup>62</sup> Circumstantial evidence which reasonably throws light on defendant's intention, either directly or indirectly, should be received on behalf of both the government and those charged with the crime.<sup>63</sup>

When not too remote or unconnected with the alleged scheme as to cast light on the question of intent, evidence tending to prove relevant acts or conduct which occurred before the date on which it is charged the scheme was devised, or before the time allowed for commencing prosecutions, may be admitted if, within the period of limitations, the mails were used in furtherance of such scheme.<sup>64</sup> Events occurring after letters have been mailed are admissible if they shed light on defendant's intent when the letters were mailed.<sup>65</sup> It is error to reject evidence of activities which occurred after the arrest, where such evidence would tend to prove that defendant did not have a fraudulent intent.<sup>66</sup>

Letters, circulars, and telegrams. Letters passing between several persons accused while carrying out their scheme,<sup>67</sup> or letters, telegrams, and circulars sent to various people to persuade them to buy shares of stock,<sup>68</sup> or letters containing misleading financial statements for the purpose of obtaining credit,<sup>69</sup> are admissible to show intent to defraud. On the other hand, letters to accused from purchasers of goods which he had sold by use of the mails, stating the efficacy thereof for the purposes for which they were sold, are admissible in his behalf for the purpose of showing good faith and the absence of an intent to defraud.<sup>70</sup>

c. Weight and Sufficiency

In order to justify a conviction for using the mails to defraud, all the essential elements or ingredients of the offense must be established beyond a reasonable doubt.

In order to justify a conviction for using the mails to defraud, all the essential elements or ingredients of the offense,<sup>71</sup> including misrepresentations when alleged,<sup>72</sup> guilty knowledge,<sup>73</sup> and use of the mails,<sup>74</sup> must be established beyond a reasonable doubt. Proof of the existence of a scheme to defraud, however strong, is not sufficient by itself to sustain a conviction.<sup>75</sup> It is not necessary for the government to prove its case by direct evidence, but it is sufficient if the essential facts and elements of the offense are proved by circumstantial evidence,<sup>76</sup> although, where the guilt depends entirely on circumstantial evidence, the government must prove its case to the exclusion of every reasonable hypothesis of innocence.<sup>77</sup> The formation or existence of a scheme to defraud,<sup>78</sup> and, likewise, the formation or exist-

A representation may be so obviously without foundation as to afford cogent evidence of a criminal intent in him who makes it.—Nemec v. U. S., C.A.Wash., 178 F.2d 656, certiorari denied 70 S.Ct. 1006, 339 U.S. 985, 94 L.Ed. —, and Dawson v. U. S., 70 S.Ct. 1006, 339 U.S. 985, 94 L.Ed. — —Rudd v. U. S., Mo., 178 F. 912, 97 C.C.A. 462.

Fraudulent nature of plan forming basis of prosecution may be inferred from series of isolated acts.—Deaver v. U. S., 155 F.2d 740, 81 U.S.App.D.C. 148, certiorari denied 67 S.Ct. 121, 329 U.S. 766, 91 L.Ed. 659.

Exclusion of reasonable doubt

(1) The circumstances proved to establish criminal intent must directly support an inference of this fact so as to exclude all reasonable doubt.—U. S. v. Berg, C.C.A.N.J., 144 F.2d 173.

(2) The circumstances proved must exclude reasonable doubt to the extent of overcoming the presumption of innocence.—Wheaton v. U. S., C.C.A.N.J., 113 F.2d 710—U. S. v. Baker, C.C.A.N.Y., 50 F.2d 122.

80. U.S.—U. S. v. Bender, C.C.A.N.Y., 60 F.2d 56, certiorari denied Posner v. U. S., 53 S.Ct. 23, 287 U.S. 598, 77 L.Ed. 521.

Participation in scheme requiring use of mails

Where it appears that a scheme to defraud could not be carried out without use of mails, a jury is warranted, without further proof, in drawing inferences that those who participated in the fraud intended to use the mails.—Blue v. U. S., C.C.A. Ohio, 138 F.2d 351, certiorari denied 64 S.Ct. 1046, 322 U.S. 736, 88 L.Ed. 1570, rehearing denied 64 S.Ct. 1259, 322 U.S. 771, 88 L.Ed. 1596, certiorari denied Clark v. U. S., 64 S.Ct. 1046, 322 U.S. 736, 88 L.Ed. 1570, rehearing denied 64 S.Ct. 1259, 322 U.S. 771, 88 L.Ed. 1596, certiorari denied Pardee v. U. S., 64 S.Ct. 1046,

81. U.S.—U. S. v. Berg, C.C.A.N.J., 144 F.2d 173—Rosenberg v. U. S., C.C.A.N.M., 120 F.2d 935—Wheaton v. U. S., C.C.A.N.J., 113 F.2d 710—Morgan v. U. S., C.C.A.Ark., 98 F.2d 473, certiorari denied 69 S.Ct. 229, 305 U.S. 648, 83 L.Ed. 419, rehearing denied 59 S.Ct. 248, 305 U.S. 674, 83 L.Ed. 437—Mackett v. U. S., C.C.A.Wis., 90 F.2d 462—Corbett v. U. S., C.C.A.Mo., 89 F.2d 124—McNear v. U. S., C.C.A.Kan., 60 F.2d 861—U. S. v. Bender, C.C.A.N.Y., 60 F.2d 56, certiorari denied Posner v. U. S., 53 S.Ct. 23, 287 U.S. 598, 77 L.Ed. 521—Butler v. U. S., C.C.A.Utah, 53 F.2d 800—Cohen v. U. S., C.C.A.N.J., 50 F.2d 819—U. S. v. Baker, C.C.A.N.Y., 50 F.2d 122—Havener v. U. S., C.C.A.Kan., 49 F.2d 196, certiorari denied 52 S.Ct. 24, 284 U.S. 644, 76 L.Ed. 547—Cochran v. U. S., C.C.A.Minn., 41 F.2d 193.

Custom

(1) Evidence of custom of mailing letters when clearly and definitely proved, and in the absence of substantial contradiction, establishes the fact of mailing.—U. S. v. Decker, D.C.Md., 51 F.Supp. 15, affirmed Decker v. U. S., 140 F.2d 378, 151 A.L.R. 754.

(2) Testimony that, in ordinary course of business, cash letters between New York and Illinois banks were sent and received by mail, was sufficient showing of use of mails to sustain conviction.—U. S. v. Leathers, C.C.A.N.Y., 135 F.2d 507.

(3) Uncontradicted evidence of usage and custom of intermediate bank, proved by its cashier, established mailing of checks by intermediate bank to drawee bank for collection, without calling mailing clerk of intermediate bank as a witness.—U. S. v. Decker, D.C.Md., 51 F.Supp. 15, affirmed, C.C.A., Decker v. U. S., 140 F.2d 378, 151 A.L.R. 754.

Delivery of letter

Under indictment alleging actual delivery of fraudulent letter, proof that letter, properly directed, has been placed in post office for transmission would make prima facie case for government.—Hagner v. U. S., App.D.C., 52 S.Ct. 417, 285 U.S. 427, 76 L.Ed. 861.

82. U.S.—Stone v. U. S., C.C.A.Tenn., 113 F.2d 70—Corbett v. U. S., C.C.A.Mo., 89 F.2d 124.

§ 53. Matter Concerning Lotteries or Similar Schemes

In accordance with the provisions of the statute, the mailing of matter concerning a lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme offering prizes dependent on lot or chance is an offense.

In accordance with the provisions of the statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1302, the validity of which has been upheld,<sup>28</sup> the mailing of matter concerning a lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme offering prizes dependent on lot or chance is an offense.<sup>29</sup> The object of the statute is to punish those who use the mails for the promotion of lotteries and similar schemes,<sup>30</sup> but, since it is highly penal in its nature, it is to be strictly construed.<sup>31</sup> While it has been broadly stated that the effect of the statute is to make any matter concerning lotteries unmailable, and to subject the sender of any such matter by mail to the penalty therein provided,<sup>32</sup> it has been held that the statute was aimed at lottery dealers only and not individual buyers of lottery tickets.<sup>33</sup>

The statute cannot, of course, be violated unless the matter deposited in the mail is of the kind excluded from the mail by the statute.<sup>34</sup> In order to constitute a lottery or similar scheme within the meaning of the statute, the winning or losing must depend on lot or chance and be beyond the will or influence of the wagerer,<sup>35</sup> and the mere fact that an element of chance is present,<sup>36</sup> or there is an expectation of a prize,<sup>37</sup> is not sufficient to bring a scheme or plan within the statute. Knowledge of accused as to the nature of the matter is essential,<sup>38</sup> and, if shown, the absence of an intent to evade the law is immaterial.<sup>39</sup> Prepayment of postage is not made an element of the offense by the statute.<sup>40</sup>

It is not a defense that the lottery involved was valid under the laws of the state<sup>41</sup> or country<sup>42</sup> where it originated, or that the letter involved was innocent on its face<sup>43</sup> or sent in reply to letters written by a detective, under a fictitious name, for no other purpose than to obtain evidence.<sup>44</sup>

Prior to the revision of 1948, the statute by express terms made it an offense knowingly to deposit, or cause to be deposited, or knowingly to send, or cause to be sent, anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the statute, or knowingly to deliver, or cause to be delivered, anything forbidden by the statute to be carried by mail. It has been said that three distinct offenses are created by the statute: Knowingly depositing, or causing to be deposited, such forbidden matter in the mail; sending such matter or causing it to be sent by mail; and knowingly causing such matter to be delivered by mail.<sup>45</sup> It is an essential element of the first offense that defendant knowingly deposited, or caused to be deposited, in the mail for conveyance or delivery thereby the matter forbidden by the statute;<sup>46</sup> but neither the first nor second offense requires for its completion that the matter deposited in the mail for transmission should be, in fact, transmitted or delivered.<sup>47</sup> On the other hand, the last offense is one which is not, and cannot be, completed without the delivery of the matter by mail to the person to whom it is addressed.<sup>48</sup> In order to constitute the second offense, the prohibited matter must have been deposited in the mail; it is not sufficient merely to send it to the post office.<sup>49</sup>

§ 54. — Indictment

The indictment in a prosecution for mailing matter concerning a lottery or a similar scheme must state the essential elements of the offense.

The indictment in a prosecution for mailing matter concerning a lottery or a similar scheme must state the essential elements of the offense,<sup>50</sup> should set forth such letter or circular complained of in hæc verba,<sup>51</sup> and should allege that accused knew that the matter deposited concerned a lottery.<sup>52</sup> The indictment must clearly describe the character of the scheme,<sup>53</sup> but, where the letter as set forth clearly shows the character of the scheme, an indictment need not allege specifically facts showing the enterprise to be a lottery, and a general averment to that effect is sufficient.<sup>54</sup> Where one count sets out a lottery scheme, subsequent counts charging the mailing of matter in furtherance of the scheme may refer thereto.<sup>55</sup> The indictment need not show how the letter or circular concerns a lottery,<sup>56</sup> but, where the letter or circular does not show on its face that it relates to a lottery, the indictment should aver the existence of a lottery, or an intention to hold a lottery, to which the letter or circular refers.<sup>57</sup>

§ 55. — Evidence and Trial

The general rules of evidence and trial in criminal cases apply in prosecutions for mailing matter concerning lotteries or similar schemes.

The general rules of evidence<sup>58</sup> and trial<sup>59</sup> in criminal cases apply in prosecutions for mailing matter concerning lotteries or similar schemes, and, in order to justify a conviction, all the elements of the offense must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.<sup>60</sup> The jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the letter was mailed,<sup>61</sup> that it concerned a lottery,<sup>62</sup> and that defendant deposited it, or caused it to be deposited, in the mail.<sup>63</sup>

In accordance with statutory provisions, 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1703, 1709, secreting, embezzling, destroying, or stealing mail matter by any postmaster or postal service employee is an offense.<sup>64</sup> A letter or package need not be removed from the post office building for the consummation of an offense under the statute,<sup>65</sup> and the crime is completed where a postal employee takes the mail matter into his possession and unlawfully removes or conceals it.<sup>66</sup> Two distinct classes of offenses are included within the statute, one relating to the embezzlement of letters or packages, and the other relating to the stealing of their contents.<sup>67</sup> In order to constitute the offense of embezzlement the matter must have come into the possession of the employee in his official character,<sup>68</sup> and must have been at the time a proper subject for deposit in the mail.<sup>69</sup> In order to constitute either of the offenses the matter alleged to have been embezzled or stolen must not have been delivered to the person to whom it was addressed.<sup>70</sup>

A postal employee who takes the contents of a letter or package is guilty of a violation of the statute, although he expects to return the matter taken after a temporary use thereof.<sup>71</sup>

(2) Persons Liable

In order to come within the intent of the statutes, the accused must have been employed in the post office department.

In order to come within the intent of the statutes, accused must have been employed in the post office department.<sup>72</sup> One who has discontinued his employment,<sup>73</sup> or one who, without compensation, assists in distributing or making up the mail<sup>74</sup> is not within the statute.

(3) Use of Decoy Letters or Packages

A decoy letter addressed to a fictitious person and intended to be removed from the mail without being carried to the place of address may nevertheless be such as is intended to be conveyed by mail or carried by an employee of the postal service, within the meaning of the statute.

postal service.<sup>82</sup> With respect to the offense of stealing mail matter it is not a defense that the matter stolen was a decoy.<sup>83</sup>

(4) Indictment

An indictment against a postal employee for embezzling, destroying, or stealing mail matter must state with certainty and particularity the essential elements of the offense.

In accordance with rules in criminal prosecutions generally, an indictment against a postal employee for embezzling, destroying, or stealing mail matter must state with certainty and particularity the essential elements of the offense.<sup>84</sup> An indictment which is sufficiently clear in its allegations to enable accused to prepare his defense and to plead the indictment in bar of a subsequent prosecution for the same offense fulfills the requirements of definiteness and certainty.<sup>85</sup> An indictment which follows the language of the statute is sufficient.<sup>86</sup> The indictment must allege the employment of accused in the post office,<sup>87</sup> although it is sufficient to charge "that defendant was a person employed in one of the departments of the Post Office Establishment of the United States,"<sup>88</sup> and the particular office held by accused need not be stated.<sup>89</sup> An indictment for embezzlement of mail matter should allege that the matter involved came into the possession of accused by reason or because of his employment in the postal service.<sup>90</sup> It is not essential that an indictment for stealing or abstraction from the mails contain the allegations necessary to charge a technical larceny.<sup>91</sup>

The indictment should allege that the matter was intended to be conveyed by mail, etc.<sup>92</sup> It is not necessary to allege that it was stamped,<sup>93</sup> or where it was mailed,<sup>94</sup> or the route on which it was to be conveyed,<sup>95</sup> or the particular place to which it was to be conveyed.<sup>96</sup>

Description of property. The indictment must contain a description of the subject matter sufficient to inform accused of the charge, and to protect him against being again placed in jeopardy.<sup>97</sup> It is not necessary to describe the property embezzled or stolen with the same precision as would be necessary in a case of forgery,<sup>98</sup> or larceny,<sup>99</sup> or some other crime directed against an instrument alleged to be contained in the letter.<sup>1</sup>

Ownership. An averment as to ownership of the mail matter embezzled or stolen by the postal employee is unnecessary.<sup>2</sup> An indictment for the embezzlement of a letter containing bank or treasury

Under an early statute in which there was a distinction between the offenses of embezzling and of stealing from letters or mail as to the necessity that the matter be intended to be conveyed by mail, it was held that it was immaterial that the decoy letter or package was not intended to be conveyed by mail or delivered by a letter carrier.—Hall v. #### Language of statute

(1) An allegation in the language of the statute that the package "was intended to be conveyed by mail" to the named addressee was sufficient, without alleging sender of package or that he intended it to be conveyed by mail.—Kelley v. U. S., C.C.A.Cal., 166 F.2d 343.

(2) Under an early statute an averment that the letter or other matter embezzled was intended to be conveyed by post, in the language of that statute, was held sufficient.—U. S. v. Martin, C.C.Ind., 26 F.Cas. No.15,731, 2 McLean 256—49 C.J. p 1225 note 31.

Stealing from mail prior to statutory change

Prior to the statutory change doing away with the distinction by which the offense of secreting, embezzling, or destroying mail matter was limited to that intended to be conveyed by mail, while the offense of stealing from letters or mail was not so limited, an indictment for stealing was not required to contain an allegation that the matter was intended to be conveyed by mail, or intended to be delivered by a postal employee, and, if such an allegation was unnecessarily inserted, it constituted surplusage.—Hall v. U. S., N.Y., 18 S.Ct. 237, 168 U.S. 632, 42 L. Ed. 607—49 C.J. p 1225 notes 29, 30.

notes need not allege whose property it was,<sup>3</sup> and it is sufficient to describe the letter containing the notes according to its direction, which is to some one other than defendant.<sup>4</sup>

Nondelivery. An indictment charging embezzlement of a letter need not allege that the letter had not been delivered to the person to whom it was directed,<sup>5</sup> since this is matter of defense peculiarly within the knowledge of accused.<sup>6</sup>

Intent. An allegation that accused feloniously did "steal" is a sufficient charge of a wrongful intent.<sup>7</sup> The indictment need not charge that the acts set forth were done feloniously.<sup>8</sup>

Date. A clerical error in the date of the offense which is otherwise sufficiently identified is not material.<sup>9</sup>

(5) Evidence and Trial

General rules of evidence and trial in criminal cases apply in a prosecution against a postal employee for embezzling, destroying, or stealing mail matter.

General rules of evidence in criminal cases apply in a prosecution against a postal employee for embezzling, destroying, or stealing mail matter.<sup>10</sup> The guilt of accused must be established beyond a reasonable doubt,<sup>11</sup> but circumstantial evidence may be sufficient.<sup>12</sup> In order to justify a conviction for larceny from the mails the evidence must establish beyond a reasonable doubt not only that the mail had been violated,<sup>13</sup> but that the letter or package, with the stealing of which defendant is charged, had been in, and was taken from, the mail.<sup>14</sup> The most satisfactory evidence that it had been in the mail is that of the person who deposited it in the post office, and, of its loss, that of the person to whom it was addressed, to the effect that it was never received by him.<sup>15</sup> Mere suspicion against defendant is overcome by the proof of his good character by reliable witnesses.<sup>16</sup>

In accordance with the general rules of trial in criminal cases, where there is sufficient evidence to support the charge, the question of the guilt of accused is for the jury.<sup>17</sup> Where a postmaster is charged with stealing a letter from the mail, the other employees through whose hands the letter would pass should be examined,<sup>18</sup> especially if accused proves an exemplary character.<sup>19</sup>

(1) Nature and Elements of Offense

Under statutory provisions, whoever steals, embezzles, or obtains by fraud or deception mail matter from or out of any authorized depository for mail matter, or mail matter which has been left for collection on, or adjacent to, a collection box or other authorized depository of mail matter, is guilty of an offense.

Under provisions of the statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1708, whoever steals, takes, or abstracts, or by fraud or deception obtains, or attempts so to obtain, from or out of any mail, post office or station thereof, letter box, mail receptacle, or any mail route, or other authorized depository for mail matter, or from a letter or mail carrier, any letter, postal card, package, bag, or mail, or abstracts or removes from any such letter, package, bag, or mail any article or thing contained therein, or secretes, embezzles, or destroys any such letter, postal card, package, bag, or mail, or any article or thing contained therein; or whoever steals, takes, or abstracts, or by fraud or deception obtains any letter, postal card, package, bag, or mail, or any article or thing contained therein which has been left for collection on or adjacent to a collection box or other authorized depository of mail matter, is guilty of an offense.<sup>20</sup> The statute applies, not only to postal employees,<sup>21</sup> but to every person, irrespective of his employment in the post office.<sup>22</sup> The offense is distinct from that described by the statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 2114, which relates to assault on a custodian of mail matter with intent to rob or steal such mail matter,<sup>23</sup> from that described by the statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 2115, which makes it an offense to break into a post office with intent to commit larceny,<sup>24</sup> and from that described by the statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1707, which makes it an offense to steal post office property.<sup>25</sup> While the statute includes larceny as understood at common law, it is not restricted to that offense, but makes criminal any unauthorized abstraction from the mails of postal matter,<sup>26</sup> and it is not necessary that the matter stolen should have possessed any value whatever.<sup>27</sup> The matter taken need not have been intended to be conveyed by mail,<sup>28</sup> and a conviction may be sustained where letters taken were decoy letters.<sup>29</sup> Whether the matter stolen from the mails was or was not mailable matter is not material.<sup>30</sup>

of matter transported by the postal agents or any letter or packet forming a component part of it.<sup>31</sup> A post office need not be a building or room set apart for that use.<sup>32</sup> An authorized depository for mail matter may be a privately owned box,<sup>33</sup> a mail pouch,<sup>34</sup> or a mail truck;<sup>35</sup> it need not be a receptacle established or provided by the postmasters general for the safe deposit of matter for the mail or for delivery.<sup>36</sup> A former statute which made it an offense to extract "from or out of" a letter box or authorized depository mail matter which has been deposited therein was held not to apply to the act of taking mail matter which had been placed on or outside of a letter box.<sup>37</sup>

Intent. The taking must be with criminal intent;<sup>38</sup> it must not be a taking by the authority of the person to whom the letter was addressed,<sup>39</sup> or a taking by mistake,<sup>40</sup> or with an innocent intent;<sup>41</sup> and the criminal intent must exist at the time the letter or mail was taken.<sup>42</sup> If the taking is with the consent of the addressee,<sup>43</sup> or the taker innocently obtains possession thereof by mistake,<sup>44</sup> no offense has been committed under the statute, although there is a subsequent embezzlement by the taker, which may be punishable under state laws.<sup>45</sup>

An indictment for stealing or embezzling mail matter must state with certainty and particularity the essential elements of the offense.<sup>46</sup> The indictment need not conform to the essentials for an indictment for larceny,<sup>47</sup> and it need not allege that the property taken was of any value.<sup>48</sup> Surplusage will not vitiate the indictment.<sup>49</sup>

Ownership. The indictment need not allege ownership of the property stolen,<sup>50</sup> but it will be sufficient if it charges that accused stole, took, or abstracted a letter, package, etc., from the mail or from a post office, which letter or package, etc., is sufficiently described for identification.<sup>51</sup> Ownership of a check sent through the mails by a debtor to a creditor with instructions to credit the amount on his debt may properly be laid in the latter,<sup>52</sup> and an indictment for the larceny of a check may properly allege the ownership to be in the addressee.<sup>53</sup>

of evidence<sup>54</sup> and trial<sup>55</sup> in criminal cases apply. The court may impose sentence within the limits prescribed by the statute.<sup>56</sup>

§ 57. Buying, Receiving, or Concealing, or Having in Possession Property Stolen from Mails

Under statutory provisions, it is an offense knowingly to buy, receive, or conceal, or unlawfully to have in possession, matter which has been stolen or embezzled from the mails.

Under provisions of the statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1708, it is an offense to buy, receive, or conceal, or unlawfully to have in possession any letter, postal card, package, bag, or mail or any article contained therein which has been stolen, taken, embezzled, or abstracted out of any mail, post office, or any other authorized depository for mail matter, knowing it to have been so stolen or embezzled.<sup>57</sup> In order to constitute this offense the property must have been stolen or embezzled from the mail.<sup>58</sup> It must also appear that accused knew that it had been so stolen or embezzled,<sup>59</sup> and that he bought it from the per-

General sentence

Where maximum imprisonment sentence for stealing mail matter was five years, and maximum for conspiracy to commit such offense was two years and, where nine counts charged the stealing of nine letters from six different pouches, even if only six offenses of stealing mail matter were charged, a single general sentence to seventeen-year term of imprisonment was valid and was not objectionable for uncertainty.—McKee v. Johnston, C.C.A.Cal., 109 F.2d 273, certiorari denied 60 S. Ct. 592, 309 U.S. 664, 84 L.Ed. 1011.

Under an indictment, which stated an offense under the statute for stealing mail from an authorized receptacle of mail matter, authorizing imposition of four-year sentence, another statute relating primarily to malicious mischief respecting letter boxes was inapplicable to restrict sentence to three-year maximum allowed thereunder.—U. In a prosecution under an early statute which made it an offense to receive certain enumerated articles, including promissory notes, which had been stolen from the mails, treasury notes were held to be promissory notes within the statute.—U. S. v. Hardyman, Va., 13 Pet. 176, 10 L.Ed. 113.

son stealing or embezzling it,<sup>60</sup> or that he received it,<sup>61</sup> or had it in his possession,<sup>62</sup> or concealed it,<sup>63</sup> or aided the thief or some one else in concealing it.<sup>64</sup> It is not necessary that all the essential ingredients of the crime of larceny be present.<sup>65</sup> Unlawful intent is essential to conviction,<sup>66</sup> but it is not essential that accused should have received the property stolen or embezzled with intent to make any gain or profit thereby to himself.<sup>67</sup> Privately owned and controlled boxes placed in buildings or on mail routes may be authorized depositories within the statute, and a person may be convicted for receiving checks stolen from private boxes attached to residences and apartment houses.<sup>68</sup>

Indictment. An indictment sufficiently describes the offense if it sets forth the facts which constitute the offense distinctly enough to give accused full knowledge of the charge he is called on to meet,<sup>69</sup> and to enable him to avail himself of a conviction or acquittal in defense of another prosecution for the same crime.<sup>70</sup> The indictment need not allege all the essential ingredients of larceny,<sup>71</sup> and it need not show the exact mail car or the particular package from which the articles have been stolen;<sup>72</sup> but it has been held that it must describe the property with the same particularity as is required in an indictment for larceny.<sup>73</sup> It is sufficient for the indictment to allege facts which clearly import unlawful intent.<sup>74</sup> Where an indictment alleges that two persons received property stolen from the mail, without alleging whether it was done jointly or severally, one of two accused may be found guilty when the other has been discharged on a plea of autrefois convict.<sup>75</sup>

Rules relating to issues, proof, and variance in criminal prosecutions generally apply in prosecutions under this statute.<sup>76</sup>

Evidence and trial. General rules of evidence<sup>77</sup> and trial<sup>78</sup> apply in prosecutions under this statute.

Sentence. The sentence imposed must be in conformity with that authorized by the statute.<sup>79</sup>

Purpose of statute

"The law intends that funds of this character should be kept absolutely separate and sacred as the best method not only of keeping the funds themselves secure, but of guarding the officers themselves from temptation and delinquency."

short,<sup>81</sup> constitutes embezzlement, without the concurrent action of anyone else.<sup>82</sup> In order to constitute an offense under the statute it must be committed knowingly and willfully;<sup>83</sup> but, on the other hand, it is sufficient that the prohibited acts were committed knowingly and willfully regardless of any specific intent,<sup>84</sup> and, therefore, it is not a defense that accused intended to restore the money appropriated at a later date<sup>85</sup> or that he did in fact do so,<sup>86</sup> although this action on his part might perhaps be considered as mitigating the offense.<sup>87</sup> It is not necessary, in order that a post office employee may be guilty of the offense, that in getting control of the money which he converted he should have been executing his employment or service, or complying with a duty thereof, if in so doing while acting as such employee he believed or pretended that he was performing a duty or function of his employment or service, or seemed to be doing so.<sup>88</sup>

Prosecution for offense. An indictment for embezzlement of postal funds by a postmaster or other employee, coming into his hands in his official capacity, should allege that the funds were in defendant's official possession when embezzled;<sup>89</sup> but the indictment will not be fatally defective for lack of a specific allegation of this kind where it alleges that, while accused was postmaster, he unlawfully and feloniously converted to his own use money of the United States, which came into his hands by virtue of his office, since this would be held to mean money in his official possession at the time of its conversion.<sup>90</sup> So, an indictment which charges in effect that the total sum alleged to have been embezzled came into the possession of defendant in his official capacity is not demurrable for failure to give a particular description of the money,<sup>91</sup> or to allege possession of it by defendant by virtue of his employment, or ownership by the post office department.<sup>92</sup>

It is unnecessary to allege specifically in the language of the statute that the money referred to came into defendant's hands "in the execution or under color of his office, employment, or service," where the facts alleged show this to be so.<sup>93</sup> While scienter is a necessary element of the offense denounced by the statute and must be alleged and proved,<sup>94</sup> no specific intent is involved, and it will be sufficient for the indictment to aver that accused acted "willfully," the term implying knowledge and purpose to do wrong.<sup>95</sup> Where the embezzlement charged is the unlawful deposit of money-order funds by an assistant postmaster to the credit of the postal account, an allegation that the deposit was made for the purpose of concealing a shortage in the postal account was proper, as showing the purpose and intent with which the deposit was made;<sup>96</sup> but it is unnecessary to show by what means the shortage arose or how it existed, or to state the law or postal regulation which accused was charged with violating in making the deposit in the manner he did.<sup>97</sup>

General rules of evidence<sup>98</sup> and trial<sup>99</sup> in criminal cases apply. By statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 3497, the transcript of the account books of the general accounting office is made prima facie evidence, and

"Except as authorized by law"

Within the statute, making it embezzlement for an employee of the postal service to convert postal funds to his own use, or to deposit them in any bank, or exchange them for other funds, except as authorized by law, the phrase "except as authorized by law" does not create an exception, in the sense that the term is usually applied to statutes creating offenses.—Petersen v. Knowledge by person receiving funds

Knowledge of the character of the funds by another person receiving them from the postal employee does not change or alter the nature of the offense if the postal employee does the forbidden things enumerated in the statute.—U. ### § 59. Taking or Opening Mail Matter to Obstruct Correspondence, Etc.

By statute, it is an offense to take a letter or other mail matter before delivery to the addressee with an intent to obstruct correspondence or to pry into the business of another.

By statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1702, the taking of a letter or other mail matter before delivery to the addressee with an intent to obstruct correspondence or pry into the secrets or business of another, or the opening, secreting, embezzlement, or destruction of such mail matter is made an offense.<sup>2</sup> In order to constitute the offense, the taking must be wrongful or unlawful,<sup>3</sup> with criminal intent,<sup>4</sup> and this intent must exist at the time of the taking.<sup>5</sup> It is not an element of the offense that, at the time of the opening, the letter was in the custody of any postmaster, carrier, or other person having charge of it.<sup>6</sup> The offense intended to be defined, where the other circumstances exist, is complete whether or not the letter contained anything of value.<sup>7</sup>

It is not a defense that the letter related in part to the business of accused or the business in which he was interested,<sup>8</sup> that the letter was not sealed, and was written by accused himself,<sup>9</sup> that the addressee's name was not correctly given,<sup>10</sup> that the letter was of no value to the person to whom it was addressed,<sup>11</sup> that accused believed in good faith, at the time that he took it out of the post office, that it was of no value,<sup>12</sup> that the letter was voluntarily delivered to accused by the postmaster,<sup>13</sup> or that the motive of accused was to prevent a prisoner from having improper communication with another.<sup>14</sup> One cannot be convicted, however, if he knew the contents of the letter before he received it.<sup>15</sup>

Termination of custody of United States. Where a letter has been delivered to the person to whom<sup>16</sup> or in whose care<sup>17</sup> it was addressed, or to an authorized agent of the addressee,<sup>18</sup> or to the writer himself, if called for before it has been placed in transit,<sup>19</sup> it is no longer in the custody of the United States, or subject to its jurisdiction and the opening, secreting, or destruction of such letter, or abstraction of its contents after it has been so delivered is not an offense under the statute. However, it has also been held that one who takes a letter from the person in whose care it has been addressed, and opens it without authority, is guilty of the offense.<sup>20</sup>

At common law. It is a misdemeanor at common law to break open a private letter and publish its contents.<sup>21</sup> It is not a public offense, however, to publish the contents of a letter which came innocently into the possession of the publisher after it had been opened.<sup>22</sup>

Prosecution and punishment. An indictment must set forth with reasonable certainty the post office from which the letter was taken.<sup>23</sup> It need not expressly allege that the opening was unlawful, if it alleges facts which amount to an unlawful opening,<sup>24</sup> or that the person to whom the letter was addressed was a real person, where other allegations necessarily import that he was a real person,<sup>25</sup> or that the letter was in the custody of any postmaster, carrier, or other person having lawful charge of the letter.<sup>26</sup> Where venue and time are laid to the act of opening, it is not necessary to lay them to the intent which it is averred accompanied the act of opening, and so must necessarily have had its existence when and where the act was done.<sup>27</sup> It is not necessary to allege that the letter alleged to have been taken did not contain anything of value, although the statute provides that the offense shall consist in taking a letter from the mail "although it does not contain any article of value, or evidence thereof."<sup>28</sup>

General rules relating to issues, proof, and variance in criminal prosecutions apply in prosecutions for the offense under consideration.<sup>29</sup>

§ 60. Detention, Delay, or Opening of Mail Matter by Postmaster or Postal Employee

Under statutory provisions, it is an offense for a postmaster or postal employee unlawfully to detain, delay, or open any letter or other mail.

Under statutory provisions, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1703, it is an offense for a postmaster or other employee of the postal service unlawfully to detain, delay, or open any letter or other mail.<sup>30</sup> This statute refers to a detention of the matter therein described before it reaches the place of destination.<sup>31</sup> The mere fact of detention is insufficient to constitute the offense;<sup>32</sup> accused must have acted unlawfully and with guilty intent.<sup>33</sup> A decoy letter or package is intended to be conveyed by mail, within the meaning of the statute,<sup>34</sup> even though it is addressed to a fictitious addressee.<sup>35</sup>

An indictment for detaining mail is sufficient where it alleges in the words of the statute that the letter in question was unlawfully detained with intent to prevent its arrival; it need not aver that the letter was knowingly and willfully detained.<sup>36</sup> An indictment against a postmaster for opening mail, which charges that "as such postmaster" he opened a letter which was intended to be conveyed by mail, sufficiently charges that, when the letter was opened by accused, it was in his possession as postmaster.<sup>37</sup> The elements of the offense may be proved by circumstantial as well as direct evidence.<sup>38</sup>

§ 61. Illegal Sale or Other Disposition of Stamps

By statute, it is an offense for any postal employee intrusted with the sale or custody of postage stamps to dispose of them except for cash or otherwise than as provided by law and the regulations of the postal department.

By statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1721, it is made an offense for a postmaster or postal service employee intrusted with the sale or custody of postage stamps, stamped envelopes, or postal cards to use or dispose of them in payment of debts, or in the purchase of merchandise or other salable articles, or to pledge or hypothecate them, or to sell or dispose of them except for cash, or for any sum other than that indicated on their face, or otherwise than as provided by law and the regulations of the department.<sup>39</sup> The statute is violated where the postmaster sells stamps intrusted to him on credit.<sup>40</sup> A postmaster who uses stamps, intrusted to him in paying for merchandise and remitting money, for the purpose of making change, violates the statute, although, in every instance, he has put the money value for the stamps so used in the till, in fact thus purchasing the stamps from himself.<sup>41</sup> A conviction of a postmaster for paying for merchandise in stamps cannot be sustained unless it is shown that the stamps so used had been received by the postmaster from the post office department.<sup>42</sup> It is not illegal for a postmaster to accept a deposit to buy postage due stamps.<sup>43</sup>

Fact that canceled stamps were placed on packages prepared by postal employees and addressed to living persons at actual addresses, for purpose of attempting to apprehend whoever was stealing mail by postal inspectors, did not compel inference that packages were not "intended to be conveyed by mail" within statute.—Kelley v. ## § 62. Robbery of Custodian of Mail

By statute, an assault on a custodian of mail matter, money, or other property of the United States with intent to rob, or the robbery of any such person of mail matter, money, or other property of the United States, is an offense.

By statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 2114, whoever assaults a custodian of mail matter, money, or other property of the United States with intent to rob, steal, or purloin such mail matter, money, or property, or robs any such person of mail matter, money, or other property of the United States, is guilty of an offense.<sup>44</sup> This offense is different from that of abstracting mail matter from an authorized depository, as discussed supra § 56, and it is also different from the offense of cutting or injuring mail bags.<sup>45</sup> The statute makes two species of robbery offenses: A robbery of the mail under such circumstances as amount to an offense by the principles of the common law;<sup>46</sup> and a robbery effected by putting in jeopardy the life of a person having the custody of the mail by the use of dangerous weapons.<sup>47</sup> The first species of offense is committed where it is shown that the mail or any part thereof was taken violently from the possession of the carrier against his will by violence or putting him in fear,<sup>48</sup> since the term "rob" as used in the statute is used in its common-law sense.<sup>49</sup> In order to constitute the second offense, three things must concur: The mail must be robbed;<sup>50</sup> the robbery must be effected by putting in jeopardy the life of the person who has the mail in custody;<sup>51</sup> and this must be done with a dangerous weapon.<sup>52</sup> Also, the statute makes it an offense to assault a person having lawful charge, control, or custody of mail matter, etc., with an intent to rob, and, in order to constitute the offense, both an assault and an intent to rob or steal mail matter in the possession of the person assaulted are essential elements,<sup>53</sup> but it is not necessary that any robbery shall actually have been committed;<sup>54</sup> any attempt to rob mail matter by an accused who assaults a mail custodian is an attempt to effect a robbery within the statute.<sup>55</sup>

Persons having charge, control, or custody of mail or property. The exact office or status of the person who is robbed, or whose life is jeopardized by means of dangerous weapons in attempted mail robbery, is immaterial as long as he had lawful charge of the mail matter.<sup>56</sup> Within the meaning of the statute is a mail carrier, although he has not taken the oath prescribed by law,<sup>57</sup> a clerk in charge of a branch contract post office,<sup>58</sup> or an employee of the postmaster,<sup>59</sup> although never officially appointed or sworn.<sup>60</sup> A postmaster from whom accused took by force a package directed to another person, which was a part of the United States mail, is within the meaning of the statute, although the package was not in the post office and had been removed to some other place,<sup>61</sup> and although the post-

Purpose of statute

The primary purpose of federal statute making it an offense to assault mail custodian with intent to rob, steal, or purloin mail matter was not the protection of the mails, except incidentally, but the protection of the custodian—U. S. v. Bruce, D.C.Ky., 52 F.Supp. 150.

Scope of statute before amendment

In order to come within terms of statute, as it appeared before amendment in 1935, providing penalty for robbery of mail matter, the personal property stolen must be mail matter or mail.—Kelly v. U. S., C.C.A. Cal., 138 F.2d 489, certiorari denied 65 S.Ct. 712, 324 U.S. 855, 89 L.Ed. 1414, rehearing denied 65 S.Ct. 864, 324 U.S. 888, 89 L.Ed. 1436—U. S. v. ### Permission to use money to purchase supplies

The provision of postal regulation that money received from sale of stamps at branch contract post offices is to be used to purchase additional supplies does not necessarily mean a transfer of title to clerk in charge thereof of stamps supplied by government so as to prevent such property from belonging to United States, within the statute penalizing mail robbery.—Johnston v. U. S., supra.

master may have intended to appropriate the package for a private debt due to himself.<sup>62</sup> The fact that one of two mail clerks in the mail car assists the robbers will not prevent a conviction of the offense, although he had immediate possession of the mail,<sup>63</sup> inasmuch as the second government employee is considered lawfully in charge, control, or custody of any mail matter.<sup>64</sup>

Persons liable. One who was present at the robbery and consented thereto, aiding, procuring, advising, or assisting in the commission of the crime, may be regarded as a principal and convicted as such;<sup>65</sup> and one who aids in the planning of the crime and harbors conspirators at his house before and after the robbery is properly indicted as a principal, although he was not actually present when the crime was committed.<sup>66</sup> Under the statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 2, providing that those who aid, abet, counsel, command, induce, or procure the commission of an offense against the United States are principals, an accessory before the fact may be convicted as a principal.<sup>67</sup>

Entrapment. Where defendants, charged with conspiracy to steal registered mail, had entered into an agreement with a mail messenger under which they were ostensibly to rob him, but were betrayed by the messenger to the postal authorities, the defense of entrapment by agents of government was not available.<sup>68</sup>

Indictment. An indictment is sufficient as to the description of the offense where it fully apprises defendants of the nature of the crime with which they are charged, and where a judgment thereon would bar any other prosecution for the same offense.<sup>69</sup>

A specific description of the nature of the mail matter involved is not necessary.<sup>70</sup> Specific allegations that the mail was taken from the person of the custodian<sup>71</sup> or that money taken in the robbery of the mail was the property of the United States<sup>72</sup> are unnecessary, where facts equivalent to such specific allegations are averred. An indictment which merely charges an "attempt to rob" a custodian of the mail is insufficient to charge an "assault with intent to rob" a custodian of the mail, within the terms of the statute.<sup>73</sup>

An indictment for advising, etc., a mail carrier to rob the mail should set forth that the carrier did in fact commit the offense, not necessarily, however, by a distinct, substantive averment of that fact.<sup>74</sup>

Issues, proof, and variance. In order to sustain an indictment for robbing "the mail" in the custody of a carrier, it is not necessary to prove a robbery of all the mail in the possession of the carrier.<sup>75</sup> Under a statute making one who aids and abets the commission of a crime a principal, an indictment directly charging accused with robbery of the mails is supported by evidence that he aided and abetted such a robbery.<sup>76</sup>

Evidence. The general rules governing criminal cases apply in prosecutions for this offense with respect to the presumptions and burden of proof,<sup>77</sup> and the admissibility<sup>78</sup> and sufficiency<sup>79</sup> of the evidence.

Trial. The rules governing criminal prosecutions generally apply as to the submission of questions to the jury,<sup>80</sup> and instructions.<sup>81</sup>

Sentence and punishment. A sentence in accordance with that prescribed by statute is proper.<sup>82</sup> If accused is convicted of the charge that, in effecting or attempting to effect the robbery, he wounded the custodian of the mail matter or property of the United States, or put his life in jeopardy by the use of a dangerous weapon, a sentence of twenty-five years is mandatory, and the court has no discretion as to the extent of the punishment.<sup>83</sup> Imposition of the twenty-five year penalty is authorized whether or not the robbery has been completed.<sup>84</sup> It has been held that only one sentence may be imposed under the statute,<sup>85</sup> so that an offender who has robbed the mails is not subject to a penalty for the completed offense and also to a penalty for an assault with intent to rob,<sup>86</sup> or, if the assault with intent to rob or the completed robbery is aggravated by wounding or putting the life of the custodian in jeopardy by the use of dangerous weapons, he cannot be sentenced for the aggravated offense and also the lesser offense;<sup>87</sup> but there is other authority which holds that an offender may be sentenced both for assault on the custodian of the mail with intent to rob the mail and for using a dangerous weapon in robbing or attempting to rob the custodian.<sup>88</sup>

§ 63. Breaking and Entering Post Office

By statute it is an offense to break or attempt to break forcibly into any post office with intent to commit any larceny or other depredation therein.

Under the statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 2115, whoever shall forcibly break into or attempt to break into any post office, or any building used in whole or in part as a post office, with intent to commit in such post office, or building, or part thereof, so used, any larceny or other depredation, shall be guilty of an offense.<sup>89</sup> The statute creates a purely statutory offense which is unknown to the common law, and which must be classed as a misdemeanor, and not a felony.<sup>90</sup> It is an offense distinct from that of stealing mail matter, as considered supra § 56 b, or that of stealing post office property.<sup>91</sup> The object of the statute is to protect the postal service of the United States, and secure the buildings used for such purpose from felonious entry with the criminal intent defined in the statute;<sup>92</sup> and its constitutionality has been upheld.<sup>93</sup> The offense is committed by breaking into any part of a building used in whole or in part as a post office with intent to commit larceny or other depredation in the part so used,<sup>94</sup> and, where a building is used only in part as a post office, it is not essential that the original illegal entry be into that part; it is sufficient if there is a breaking into such building with intent to commit larceny or other depredation in the part used therein as a post office.<sup>95</sup> The attempt to commit larceny or other depredation in the part of the building used as a post office is an essential element of the offense,<sup>96</sup> and breaking into a building with intent to commit larceny in a part of the building not used as a post office is not within the statute.<sup>97</sup> The offense is complete when the post office is forcibly broken into with intent to steal or commit other depredation,<sup>98</sup> and it is not necessary in order to constitute the offense that larceny<sup>99</sup> or other depredation<sup>1</sup> should have been committed. One who, after breaking into a post office with intent to commit larceny therein, steals postal funds, commits two separate offenses, one under the statute under consideration, and the other under another statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1707, making it a criminal offense to steal property belonging to the post office department.<sup>2</sup>

Indictment. The acts and intent which constitute the crime must be set forth in an indictment with reasonable particularity of time, place, and circumstances.<sup>3</sup> If only a part of the building is used for a post office, the indictment must show that the breaking was done with intent to commit larceny or other depredation in the part of the building used as a post office,<sup>4</sup> and an indictment in effect alleging that the breaking was done with the intent to commit larceny anywhere in the building is insufficient;<sup>5</sup> but it need not allege that the defendant broke into the post office part of the building.<sup>6</sup> Where the whole building is used as a post office, the indictment is not defective for failure to charge whether the building is used in whole or in part as a post office.<sup>7</sup>

Evidence and trial. The general rules governing criminal cases apply with respect to evidence<sup>8</sup> and trial<sup>9</sup> in prosecutions for this offense.

Sentence and punishment. The sentence imposed must be in conformity with the punishment prescribed by statute.<sup>10</sup> Prior to the amendment of the statute in 1948, the imposition of both a fine and a sentence of imprisonment was mandatory,<sup>11</sup> but the failure of the court to impose a fine was held not to invalidate the original sentence of punishment, and the court could correct the sentence by imposing the required fine.<sup>12</sup>

§ 64. Other Offenses

The statutes punish numerous other crimes against the postal service including the stealing or forging of mail locks or keys, stealing post office property, injuring mail bags, mailing threatening communications, forging or altering money orders, etc.

In addition to the particular offenses specifically considered, supra §§ 34-63, the statutes punish numerous other crimes against the postal service,<sup>13</sup> including, under various sections of 18 U.S.C.A., such as under § 1704, the stealing or forging of mail locks or keys,<sup>14</sup> under § 1707, stealing post office property,<sup>15</sup> under § 1706, injuring mail bags,<sup>16</sup> un-

As distinct from offense:

Of breaking and entering post office see supra § 63.
Of stealing mail matter see supra § 56.

Asportation of property

To "steal or purloin" under the statute means unlawfully to take and carry away the personal property of another, and asportation is an essential element of the offense.—Warner v. U. S., C.C.A.Miss., 168 F. 2d 765.

Cutting of several mail bags

Each successive cutting into a different mail bag with intent to rob or steal the mail therefrom by persons who, in the same transaction, tear or cut successively a number of such bags with intent to rob or steal any of the mail, is a distinct offense.—Ebeling v. Forgery or alteration of money order. Under the statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 500, whoever falsely makes or forges, any order, in imitation of, or purporting to be, a money order issued by the post office department, or by any postmaster or agent thereof, or alters a money order, is guilty of an offense.<sup>23</sup> The crime defined by this statute is the common-law crime of forgery with respect to a postal money order.<sup>24</sup> While an intent to defraud is an essential element of the offense,<sup>25</sup> it is not essential that there should be an intent to defraud the United States, but it will be sufficient if the intent is to defraud some other person.<sup>26</sup> Issuance by a postmaster of a money order on the application of a fictitious person without consideration therefor, and with intent to defraud, is a false making and forgery of the order.<sup>27</sup> Where several money orders were forged by accused on the same date and as a part of the same general transaction, the forgery of each constitutes a separate offense.<sup>28</sup> One who knowingly aids or assists another in altering a money order by raising its value may be convicted as a principal.<sup>29</sup> By further express provision of the same statute, one who, knowing the signature on a post office money order to be a forgery, presents it for payment, and collects it, is punishable under the statute.<sup>30</sup>

the carrying of the mails. A summary proceeding for the return of seized mail matter may be brought in the federal district court which has jurisdiction.

In order to protect and enforce the monopoly, reserved to the post office department, of carrying the mail, in addition to prohibiting any one other than the government from engaging therein, and making it an offense to do so, provision has been made by statute, 39 U.S.C.A. §§ 498, 700, for searches and seizures with respect to mail matter being transported in violation of law; and the constitutionality of the statutes has been upheld.<sup>32</sup> The seized matter may be held only for the period of time prescribed by statute,<sup>33</sup> and, if the seizure is illegal, the matter cannot legally be held for any length of time.<sup>34</sup> A person aggrieved by the seizure has the right to have the legality of the seizure determined as soon as possible.<sup>35</sup>

Inasmuch as congress has specifically authorized United States commissioners to issue search warrants in cases enumerated by the statutes conferring the power, and has conferred no authority to issue warrants to search and seize letters, writings, etc., used or intended to be used in the execution of a scheme to defraud in the execution of which the mails are used, the United States commissioners have no authority to issue a search warrant for this purpose;<sup>36</sup> and no authority has been conferred on a district judge to issue a search warrant in such a case.<sup>37</sup>

Return of seized matter. An aggrieved person may commence a summary proceeding for the return of the seized matter<sup>38</sup> in the federal district court which has jurisdiction,<sup>39</sup> and he need not apply to the postmaster general for a hearing prior to commencing the proceeding<sup>40</sup> or make the postmaster general a party to the proceeding.<sup>41</sup> The summary proceeding is properly commenced by an order to show cause and petition,<sup>42</sup> but the fact that the proceeding is initiated by a notice of motion and affidavit is not necessarily fatal to the application.<sup>43</sup> The summary proceeding for return of the seized matter is not the proper action to determine the legality of the seizure,<sup>44</sup> but the court may direct that the property be returned, unless the government brings proceedings to determine the legality of the seizure within a reasonable time.<sup>45</sup> Orders issued by the court in the proceeding are binding, provided they are not an abuse of judicial discretion.<sup>46</sup>

§ 67. Liability to Addressee of Obstructed Mail

A person who obstructs mail received by him but addressed to another may be liable for the damages resulting therefrom.

A person receiving a letter addressed to another owes him the duty not to obstruct his mail,<sup>47</sup> and a breach of this duty renders him liable for the damages proximately resulting therefrom.<sup>48</sup>

VII. POSTAL SAVINGS DEPOSITORIES

§ 68. In General

- a. Establishment and administration in general
- b. Deposit of postal savings funds with bank

a. Establishment and Administration in General

The postal savings system, which is established by statute, is within the constitutional powers of the government. Officers of the postal department are held to the same accountability for postal savings funds as for public moneys.

The Postal Savings Act, 39 U.S.C.A. §§ 751-769, provides for the establishment and administration of a postal savings system, and makes the necessary provisions therefor,<sup>49</sup> and the creation and operation of the postal savings system are within the constitutional powers of the government.<sup>50</sup> By the provisions of the Postal Savings Act, the postmaster general may require postmasters and other postal officers and employees to perform postal savings depository business;<sup>51</sup> and he may, subject to the approval of the board of trustees, issue rules and regulations to carry the provisions of the act into effect.<sup>52</sup> Under the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 762, postal savings depository funds must be kept separate from other funds by postmasters or other officers or employees of the postal service.<sup>53</sup> Inasmuch as the statutes, 31 U.S.C.A. §§ 496, 498, 510, 514, require an administrative audit by the several executive departments and government establishments of all public accounts preliminary to their audit by the general accounting office, a regulation of the comptroller general directing the discontinuance of accounting in the division of postal savings is void.<sup>54</sup>

master individually, and a postmaster and the sureties on his bond, are liable as insurers for public moneys coming into their hands, as discussed supra §§ 7, 8, and by the provisions of the Postal Act and regulations of the post office department, promulgated in pursuance thereof, postal officers and other officers of the department and their bondsmen are held to the same accountability for postal savings funds as for public moneys.<sup>55</sup> The board of trustees has no authority to relieve from accountability those responsible for the safe-keeping and proper disposition of postal funds.<sup>56</sup> The postmaster general may relieve postmasters having custody of postal savings funds for the loss thereof when due to burglary, fire, or other unavoidable casualty resulting from no fault or negligence on their part;<sup>57</sup> but not otherwise.<sup>58</sup>

b. Deposit of Postal Savings Funds with Bank

The statute provides for the deposit of postal savings funds in solvent banks, and the sufficiency of the security which is offered by a bank in which postal savings are deposited rests entirely in the discretion of the board of trustees.

By statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 759, provision is made for the deposit of postal savings funds in solvent banks, whether organized under national or state laws, and whether or not member banks of the federal reserve system, being subject to national or state supervision and examination.<sup>59</sup> In order to authorize a bank to receive deposits under this provision, it is necessary that it should be incorporated or clothed with the essential attributes of a corporation by virtue of legislative sanction.<sup>60</sup> The mere authority to transact a banking business, although granted in pursuance of state laws, carries with it no implication of organization under the state laws, irrespective of whether authority is, or is not, granted subject to state supervision and examination.<sup>61</sup> However, a private bank on which some of the essential attributes of a corporation are conferred by legislative sanction is within the statute, and may become a depository of postal savings funds.<sup>62</sup>

The object of the provision of the statute that postal savings funds shall be deposited among qualified banks substantially in proportion to the capital and surplus of each bank, is to insure that the banks shall be treated fairly as between each other, without favoritism or injustice.<sup>63</sup> In a construction of this provision by the attorney general, it was said that it was subject to regulations by the board of trustees, provided the regulations were reasonable, nondiscriminative, and adapted to carry out the purposes of the act,<sup>64</sup> and that the practice of excluding the emergency credit from the proportionate share in postal savings deposits of the bank allowing it is not in conflict with this provision.<sup>65</sup> By a further provision of the act, it is provided that, if no qualified bank is available to receive the funds in the particular place in which a postal savings depository is located, the deposit shall be apportioned among the qualified banks equally convenient to such locality.<sup>66</sup>

Security for funds. It has been held that, under the statute, the sufficiency of any bonds offered as security, even if they fall within the class prescribed therein, rests entirely in the uncontrolled discretion of the board of trustees.<sup>67</sup> Improvement bonds of a municipality, which purport to bind it without any reservation or limitation, are public bonds supported by the taxing power within the meaning of the statute, and may be accepted as security,<sup>68</sup> but improvement bonds which are not payable out of the general taxes of a city, but merely out of a special fund,<sup>69</sup> or public building bonds issued by a state and payable out of a trust fund which the state is pledged merely to administer,<sup>70</sup> are not acceptable as security for postal savings deposits.

Since there is no limitation in the statute as to the ownership of the bonds required to be deposited by the bank as security, bonds owned by the bank may be given as security.<sup>71</sup> On the other hand, the securities taken by the board of trustees need not be the property of the bank.<sup>72</sup> A bank may be permitted to pledge with the board of trustees bonds lent to it for that purpose,<sup>73</sup> provided the board takes them in pledge on a valuable consideration with no other notice than that they are being used in the exact manner authorized by the owners thereof.<sup>74</sup> It has been said, however, that it would seem advisable that every deposit of security to the board of trustees should be made by the bank itself, accompanied by assurances from the owners of the securities admitting their consent to the pledge for the consideration running from the government to themselves, namely, the deposit to be made by the government at their request at the bank in which they are interested.<sup>75</sup>

When bonds are transferred to the board of trustees by the bank in consideration of the deposit with the bank for postal savings funds, the board acquires a good title thereto as pledgee, because the bonds are negotiable instruments, and the board is a purchaser for value without notice of any flaw in the title thereto.<sup>76</sup>

In an action to compel the treasurer of the United States to deliver to a receiver of a state bank, bonds which the bank had pledged to secure deposits of postal savings funds, the United States has been held to be an indispensable party.<sup>77</sup>

§ 69. Deposits

- a. In general
- b. Exchange of deposits for government bonds
- c. Payment or settlement of accounts

a. In General

A deposit in a postal savings account is a trust fund which never passes into, or becomes the property of, the United States treasury. No person may have more than one deposit account with the postal savings system.

A deposit in a postal savings account is a trust fund which never passes into, or becomes the property of, the United States treasury;<sup>78</sup> it does not, in a strict sense, amount to a loan to the government.<sup>79</sup> By the express provision of a section of the Postal Savings Act, 39 U.S.C.A. § 754, no person may have more than one deposit account with the postal savings system.<sup>80</sup> By another section of the act, 39 U.S.C.A. § 758, depositors are authorized to withdraw their deposits at any time,<sup>81</sup> the withdrawals to be paid in the state or territory concerned.<sup>82</sup> It is further provided in 39 U.S.C.A. § 766 that the faith of the United States is pledged to the payment by the deposits made in postal savings depository offices,<sup>83</sup> but this statute applies only where there is a deficiency in the funds of the system,<sup>84</sup> and the United States may not be sued by one of the depositors where there are sufficient funds on deposit to meet the claim.<sup>85</sup>

Interest or dividends. The rate of interest on deposits is dependent on the statute.<sup>86</sup> Where the statute under which a bank holding funds as depository for postal savings funds is incorporated provides that the net profits of savings banks shall be distributed as dividends among the depositors, but does not authorize the payment of interest on deposits, such bank cannot give dividends in addition to the interest which it is required to pay on its deposits of postal savings funds under the federal statute.<sup>87</sup>

b. Exchange of Deposits for Government Bonds

Depositors may exchange their deposits for government bonds, provided the deposits are authorized by law.

A section of the Postal Savings Act, 39 U.S.C.A. § 760, authorizes depositors to exchange their deposits for government bonds.<sup>88</sup> The section, of course, refers only to deposits authorized by law,<sup>89</sup> and, in consequence, the opening of a second postal savings account, which is expressly forbidden by statute, cannot be treated as a proper basis for the exchange of deposits for bonds.<sup>90</sup>

c. Payment or Settlement of Accounts

The payment of money in accordance with a final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction adjudicating the right of any person to a sum deposited with a postal savings depository operates as a full discharge from the claim.

In accordance with provisions of the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 767, the payment of money in accordance with a final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction adjudicating the right of any person to a sum deposited with a postal savings depository operates as a full discharge from the claim.<sup>91</sup> Under the provision that a final judgment adjudicating right or interest in the credit of any sums deposited should be accepted by the board of trustees of the postal savings depository system as conclusive, whether a judgment in a creditor's suit to reach the debtor's postal savings adjudicated the right or interest of the debtor in the postal savings depository is a question for the board of trustees.<sup>92</sup>

Settlement of accounts of deceased depositors. Under a provision of the Postal Savings Act, 39 U.S.C.A. § 768, authorizing the postmaster general to make rules and regulations with respect to the deposit in, and withdrawal of moneys from, postal savings depositories by the issue of pass books or such other devices as he may adopt as evidence of such deposits or withdrawals, the postmaster general is authorized to make regulations dispensing with administration proceedings in the settlement of accounts of deceased depositors in the postal savings system, provided such regulations be reasonable, adapted to the discovery of truth, and based on the general legal principles governing the distribution of decedents' estates.<sup>93</sup> It would probably be well, however, to have a regulation of this kind printed in the pass book or otherwise brought to the notice of the depositor, and have the regulation adopted by the board of trustees.<sup>94</sup>

Where a person, now deceased, had opened a postal savings deposit under an arrangement with the assistant postmaster that, in case of death, the money would be paid to defendant, and defendant was administratrix of the estate of deceased, the post office department was not entitled to return of the deposit paid to defendant to await determination by a state court as to its ownership on the ground that the assistant postmaster was not authorized to accept a deposit on the conditions specified.<sup>95</sup>

Aliens. Where a deceased depositor was a subject of a foreign country, payment of the postal savings account to the parties entitled thereto in accordance with the laws of the deceased's country is proper, notwithstanding there had been no administration in accordance with the laws of the state where the alien died,<sup>96</sup> inasmuch as the postal regulation providing that the postal savings of a deceased alien may be delivered, on application, to the proper consular officer is independent of the provisions which require administration of an estate.<sup>97</sup>

POSTPONE. The word "postpone" carries with it the idea of deferring the doing of something until, or the taking effect of something at, a future or later time,<sup>1</sup> and it signifies to put off or defer the coming into existence of a right, obligation, condition, or other thing.<sup>2</sup> It has a plain, simple, unambiguous, and universally accepted meaning,<sup>3</sup> and it is defined as meaning to adjourn;<sup>4</sup> to put off;<sup>5</sup> to defer;<sup>6</sup> to defer to a future or later time;<sup>7</sup> to delay.<sup>8</sup>

"Postpone" has been distinguished from,<sup>9</sup> and held not synonymous with,<sup>10</sup> "suspend." It has been compared with, or distinguished from, "extend" see 35 C.J.S. p 288 note 37.

POSTPONEMENT. The act of postponing, or the state of being postponed; a deferring; a subordination, as in place or regard.<sup>11</sup> "Postponement" has been compared with, or distinguished from, "discharge" see 26 C.J.S. p 1330 note 39, and in Criminal Law § 480 it is stated that, while the terms "continuance" and "postponement" have been distinguished, the courts use the words interchangeably. Postponements in civil actions are discussed in Continuances § 1 et seq.

POSTSCRIPT. When used as a noun, the word "postscript" means a note or series of notes appended to a completed letter, book, or the like, usually giving an afterthought or additional information.<sup>12</sup> When used as a verb the word "postscript" means to add to.<sup>13</sup>

POST TRAUMATIC PSYCHOSIS. See Insane Persons § 2 d.

POSTULATE. To affirm or assert without proof; to claim as existent or true; to assume; to posit; assume the possibility of.<sup>14</sup> "Postulate" has been held to be synonymous with "assume" see 7 C.J.S. p 105 note 25.

POST, WRIT OF ENTRY IN. In English law, a writ, now abolished, given by the statute of Marlbridge, 52 Henry III chapter 30, which provided that, when the number of alienations of descents exceeded the usual degrees, a new writ should be allowed, without any mention of degrees at all.<sup>15</sup>

POT. A round vessel, characteristically rather deep than broad, made of earthenware or metal, and used for culinary and other purposes, chiefly domestic.<sup>16</sup>

The word "pot," as a gambling term, is defined in Gaming § 1 c (2); and as a mining term it is defined in Mines and Minerals § 3 h.

fessing to possess a power and pretending to exercise that power.<sup>71</sup> "Power" has been held to be synonymous with "authority" see 7 C.J.S. p 1291 note 10.1, "jurisdiction" see 50 C.J.S. p 1091 note 44, and "right,"<sup>72</sup> and has been compared with or distinguished from "authority" see 7 C.J.S. p 1291 note 10.1, "capacity" see 12 C.J.S. p 1116 note 48.1, and "privilege."<sup>73</sup> "Powers" has been held synonymous with, and also distinguished from, "cognizance," see 14 C.J.S. p 1310 note 3.

The word "power" and the plural form "powers" are treated in various connections throughout this work. The power of a municipality is discussed in Municipal Corporations § 106. For reference to county powers and the powers of county officials see the index to the title Counties. The powers of officers and boards generally are treated in Officers §§ 102-109. For reference to corporate powers and the powers of corporate officials see the index to the title Corporations. For other particular applications and specific references consult the Descriptive-Word Index.

In mechanics. The word "power" is used with a mechanical signification, and power in this sense is an intangible thing.<sup>74</sup> It is any form of energy available for doing any kind of work, as steam-power, water-power; specifically, mechanical energy, as distinguished from work done by hand, as a machine run by power;<sup>75</sup> energy developed by machinery;<sup>76</sup> capacity;<sup>77</sup> capacity for operating, as the power of an engine governor;<sup>78</sup> force;<sup>79</sup> applied force, as the power applied at one end of a lever to overcome a "resistance" at the other end;<sup>80</sup> capability of performing mechanical work, as measured by the rate at which it is or can be done.<sup>81</sup> "Power" also is the rate at which mechanical energy is exerted or mechanical work performed, as by an engine or other machine, or an animal.<sup>82</sup> In this sense "power" has been compared with, or distinguished from, "engine" see 30 C.J.S. p 250 note 4.

Implied powers. An implied power is sired by,<sup>83</sup> or rests on,<sup>84</sup> necessity. It comes from,<sup>85</sup> and finds justification in,<sup>86</sup> an express power. It may not exist until an express power has been created from which it may spring.<sup>87</sup> An implied power functions as an essential aid in the fulfillment of the purpose to which its parent power is directed.<sup>88</sup> It must be not merely convenient, but necessary to the exercise of the power expressly conferred,<sup>89</sup> and the strength it gains from necessity must be sufficient to withstand all attacks of doubt, and, needless to say, it cannot operate in fields proscribed by organic law.<sup>90</sup>

The implied powers of an officer are treated generally in Officers § 102. The power to dispose of real or personal property may arise by implication, and when such is the case the power is denominated an "implied power" and such powers are treated in Powers § 10.

Sovereign power. Power without limitation.<sup>91</sup> The term has been applied to the people of the state in their sovereign capacity, acting through their representatives, the legislature.<sup>92</sup> In all govern-

The units most commonly used are the horse power and the watt. The power of a direct electric current is the product of the voltage and current. The true power of an alternating current is the product of voltage, current, and power factor. The apparent power (volt amperes) of an alternating current is the product of voltage and current.—Chrysler Corporation v. Trott, supra.

I. IN GENERAL
§ 1. Definition and Nature in General

A power is an authority whereby a person is empowered to dispose of property for his own benefit or for the benefit of others, and operating on an estate or interest vested either in himself or another, such authority not being derived out of such estate or interest.

A "power", in the sense in which the term is used with respect to property, in contradistinction to its general or unrestricted meaning, is defined under the common law, and under statutes substantially embodying the common-law definition, as a liberty or authority reserved by, or limited to, a person to dispose of real or personal property for his own benefit, or for the benefit of others,<sup>1</sup> and operating on an estate or interest, vested either in himself or some other person, the liberty or authority, however, not being derived out of such estate or interest, but overreaching or superseding it, either wholly or partially.<sup>2</sup> A power is not property<sup>3</sup> or a property right<sup>4</sup> or interest;<sup>5</sup> nor is it an estate;<sup>6</sup> it is a personal privilege<sup>7</sup> or capacity,<sup>8</sup> a mere authority,<sup>9</sup> akin to an agency<sup>10</sup> of limited scope or power,<sup>11</sup> under which the donee acts for the donor.<sup>12</sup> It is not technically a form of ownership;<sup>13</sup> nor, as discussed infra § 31, does it of itself imply ownership; but it is clearly a right affecting ownership.<sup>14</sup>

Distinguished from trust. While a power is of the nature of a trust in that, if exercised, it must substantially carry out the donor's directions,<sup>15</sup> except where it is a power in trust, as discussed infra

§ 6, it is not imperative,<sup>16</sup> and therein differs from a trust which is always imperative.<sup>17</sup> A power may coexist with a trust, where they are not inconsistent.<sup>18</sup>

Distinguished from "common-law authority." A "power," strictly defined, is to be distinguished from a mere common-law authority, such as a power to sell, which is equivalent to the designation of a person to take the property;<sup>19</sup> but the courts have commonly used the term "power" to include such authorities, and it will be so used in this title.

Distinguished from will. The distinction between a will and a power of appointment has been said to be that a will concerns the estate of the testator, while an appointment under a power concerns that of the donor of the power.<sup>20</sup>

Legality under common law and statute. Under the common law of England<sup>21</sup> and where such common law obtains in this country,<sup>22</sup> powers are legal; but their validity may be affected or limited by statute.<sup>23</sup> Where such is the intent of the legislature, statutes relating to powers may constitute a complete and exclusive code governing powers.<sup>24</sup>

§ 2. What Property May Be Subject of Powers

Generally speaking, both real and personal property may be the subject of powers.

Although, as discussed supra § 1, the term is sometimes defined with respect to real estate only, both real and personal property may be the subject of powers,<sup>25</sup> and in numerous cases powers over personalty have been considered without reference to the character of the property.<sup>26</sup> Moreover, statutes which in terms are applicable only to powers affecting real estate have been held to apply also to those concerning personalty.<sup>27</sup>

§ 3. Purposes for Which Powers May Be Created

In the absence of statute providing otherwise, powers may ordinarily be created to do anything which the donor himself might lawfully do.

Generally speaking, in the absence of any statute otherwise providing, powers or authorities may be created to do any act which the donor himself might lawfully perform;<sup>28</sup> and a power to do an unlawful act is void.<sup>29</sup> Power may be given to one of several grantees in a deed to annul the use therein named and create others,<sup>30</sup> and in such case the other grantees take title subject to the exercise of the power.<sup>31</sup>

Powers most commonly created are those to appoint, as discussed infra § 24, to sell or exchange, infra § 25, to mortgage, infra § 26, and to lease, manage, control, or the like, infra §§ 27-29.

§ 4. Who May Create Powers

A power can ordinarily be created only by a person competent to do the act which he assumes to authorize.

The grantor or donor of a power can only be a person competent to do the act which he assumes to authorize.<sup>32</sup>

§ 5. To Whom Powers May Be Granted

Unless otherwise provided by statute, a power may be granted to any person, including one who is not capable of contracting or conveying; it may be lawfully granted to one having an interest in the property.

Except when otherwise provided by statute,<sup>33</sup> it is a general rule that any person may be the donee or grantee of a power, whether or not he is capable of contracting or conveying;<sup>34</sup> and so a power may be granted to a married woman,<sup>35</sup> or an infant,<sup>36</sup>

Other definitions

(1) A power of appointment is a "general power of appointment" when there is no limitation as to its exercise, except as to the manner, or any limitation as to the persons in whose favor it is to be exercised, or as to amounts to be given to such persons.—Lamkin v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Baltimore, Md., 64 A.2d 704, 707.

(2) A power of appointment is "general" if it is capable of being exercised by donee in favor of anyone including himself without restriction as to estate or interest appointed.

Necessity of power to vest fee simple

The right of a donee of a power of appointment to vest fee-simple estate in his appointee is not an essential attribute of a general power of appointment, but a general power of appointment exists if the donee has the right to appoint anyone he pleases.—Fidelity-Philadelphia Trust Co. v. McCaughn, C.C.A. Pa., 34 F.2d 600.

Power to appoint to donee's own estate

A power of appointment is "general" only if donee of power may appoint to anyone, including his own estate or creditors, thus having as full dominion over property as if he owned it.—Henderson v. Rogan, C.C. A.Cal., 159 F.2d 855, certiorari denied 67 S.Ct. 1534, 331 U.S. 845, 91 L.Ed. 1864—Vaughan v. Clauson, D.C.Me., 54 F.Supp. 8, affirmed, C.C.A., 147 F.2d 84.

Restricted method of exercise

(1) A power is regarded as "general" when it is not restricted by the donor to a particular object or beneficiary, although the method of exercising it may be restricted and limited to a testamentary paper. U.S.—Leser v. Burnet, C.C.A., 46 F.

special, limited, or particular when it is exercisable only in favor of persons or a class of persons designated or described in the instrument creating the power.<sup>46</sup>

In some jurisdictions, and in some instances under statutes so providing, a power, whether general or special, is classified as beneficial where no person other than the grantee has, by the terms of its creation, any interest in its execution;<sup>47</sup> and as in trust, where, being a general power, any person or class of persons other than the grantee is designated as entitled to the proceeds or any portion of them or any other benefits to result from its execution, or where, being a special power, either the authorized disposition or charge is limited to be made to a person or class of persons other than the grantee of the power, or any person or class of persons other than such grantee is designated as entitled to any benefit from the disposition or charge authorized by the power.<sup>48</sup> Under such a classification, a power is not beneficial when by the terms of its creation other persons than the grantee have an interest in its execution,<sup>49</sup> or may in any contingency have such an interest.<sup>50</sup> Powers in trust are distinguishable from trusts, in that in the latter the trustee takes legal title to the property, which does not pass to a trustee of the power.<sup>51</sup>

Discretionary or imperative powers. A general power of appointment is never coupled with a duty to make the appointment,<sup>52</sup> but a special power may be either discretionary or it may be coupled with a duty.<sup>53</sup> A special power is discretionary where its exercise or nonexercise depends wholly on the volition of the grantee;<sup>54</sup> it is coupled with a trust

Other definitions

A power is "special" if its exercise is restricted to particular persons or a particular class of persons, or if it can be exercised only for certain named purposes or under certain conditions.—In re Lidston's Estate, 202 P.2d 259, 266, 32 Wash. 2d 408.

"Exclusive" or "nonexclusive" special power

If a special power permits the donee to bar one or more members of the designated class from receiving a portion of the property it is "exclusive," but, if every member of the class is entitled to some portion, the power is "nonexclusive."—Moore v. Emery, 18 A.2d 781, 788, 137 Me. 259.

"Special" as signifying "express"

The terms "special power" or "specially empowered" are sometimes used, not in contradistinction to a general power, but as meaning a power specifically expressed or clearly and unequivocally manifested.

49 C.J. p 1251 note 51.

52. N.Y.—Merrill v. Lynch, 13 N.Y.S.2d 514, 173 Misc. 39.

Reason for rule

A general power of appointment cannot be coupled with a trust, since it is inherent in the nature of a power coupled with a trust that the trust duty be enforceable by the potential appointees, and, if such potential appointees include the whole world, no one has a right to enforce the power, and the effective exercise or nonexercise of a general power depends solely on the will or caprice of the grantee.—Merrill v. Lynch, supra.

53. N.Y.—Merrill v. Lynch, supra.

Nature of "discretionary power"

A power is "discretionary" when it is not imperative or, if imperative, when the time, manner, or extent of execution is left to donee's discretion, a "discretionary power" being the power to do or to refrain from doing a certain thing.

duty where its exercise is obligatory on the grantee.<sup>55</sup> Powers in trust are imperative,<sup>56</sup> unless their execution or nonexecution is expressly made to depend on the will of the grantee.<sup>57</sup>

§ 7. — Powers Appendant or Appurtenant, in Gross, and Collateral

Powers appendant or appurtenant are those which depend strictly on an estate limited to the person to whom they are given; powers in gross are powers given to one to whom an interest in the property is limited or reserved by the instrument creating the power, which enable him to create such estates only as will not attach on his own interest, or will take effect only at the termination of his estate. A collateral power is a power given to one having no interest in the property, and to whom no interest therein is limited by the instrument creating the power.

Powers appendant or appurtenant are those which strictly depend on an estate limited to the person to whom they are given,<sup>58</sup> as where an estate for life is accompanied by a power to grant leases in possession,<sup>59</sup> or to convey or encumber the property;<sup>60</sup> or where an estate is limited to such uses as a designated person shall appoint, and in default of and until appointment, to him in fee;<sup>61</sup> or where property is mortgaged and a power of sale is given to the mortgagee.<sup>62</sup>

Powers in trust are discussed supra § 6.

Powers in gross are powers given to one whom an interest in the property subject to the power is limited or reserved by the instrument creating the power, which enable him to create such estates only as will not attach on his own interest, or will take effect only at the termination of his estate,<sup>63</sup> as where land is granted or devised to a person for life with power to appoint the estate at his death.<sup>64</sup>

Powers both appendant and in gross. A power may, with respect to different estates in the property subject to it, have different aspects, so that, in respect of one estate, it is a power appendant, and in respect of another a power in gross.<sup>65</sup>

Collateral or naked powers. A power is simply collateral when given to one not having any interest in the property subject to the power, and to whom no interest therein is limited by the instrument creating the power.<sup>66</sup> Such a power is sometimes referred to as a "naked" power.<sup>67</sup>

§ 8. — Powers Coupled with Interest

A power coupled with an interest is a power accompanied by, or connected with, an interest in the property.

A power coupled with an interest, as distinguished from a collateral or naked power, as discussed supra § 7, is a power accompanied by, or connected with, an interest in the property subject to the power.<sup>68</sup> Accordingly, where a power is given in aid of the security for a debt, and the property which is the subject matter of the power is delivered or assigned with the power to the creditor as a part of the same transaction, the power is coupled with an interest.<sup>69</sup> The fact that the donee has an interest in that which is to be produced by the exercise of the power, however, does not render the power one coupled with an interest.<sup>70</sup>

II. CREATION AND VALIDITY

§ 9. Instruments Creating Powers

A power can be conferred only by an instrument executed with the same formalities as would be necessary for the disposition of the subject matter of the power.

A power to dispose of property can be conferred only by an instrument executed with the same formalities as would be necessary for the disposition of the subject matter of the power.<sup>71</sup> Accordingly, a deed<sup>72</sup> or will<sup>73</sup> is ordinarily requisite, or at least sufficient;<sup>74</sup> but a power may be created by an instrument not under seal if an unsealed instrument would be sufficient to do the act authorized.<sup>75</sup> It has been held that a provision in the charter of a benevolent society authorizing each member to dispose of certain funds creates a power.<sup>76</sup> The creation of a power of appointment amounts to a virtual offer to the donee of the estate or fund, which the donee may accept or reject at will.<sup>77</sup> If he declines or refuses to accept the power, it will be treated as absolutely null.<sup>78</sup>

§ 10. Provisions Granting or Reserving Powers

No particular form of words is necessary to constitute a grant or reservation of a power; any words clearly indicating an intention to do so are sufficient.

Powers may be granted or reserved, whether by deed, will, or otherwise, either expressly<sup>79</sup> or by implication.<sup>80</sup> No particular form of words is necessary; any words, however informal, which clearly indicate an intention to give or reserve a power are sufficient for that purpose;<sup>81</sup> but a power is not created unless an intention to do so is expressed or clearly implied.<sup>82</sup> Accordingly, whether or not a power is expressly granted or reserved,<sup>83</sup> or is to be implied from the provisions of an instrument,<sup>84</sup> is a question of intention and construction, having in view the whole instrument.<sup>85</sup> It is indispensable, however, to the creation of a power that the property forming its subject matter be definitely identified,<sup>86</sup> and that its objects be specified in or clearly ascertainable from the instrument by which it is

Instruments held to create power of appointment

(1) Will creating trust for benefit of son, directing that on death of son trust be continued for benefit of another beneficiary, and requesting that the latter beneficiary will the remainder to charity, constituted only a grant to the latter of a power to appoint remainder by will.—In re Hilliard's Estate, 86 N.Y.S.2d 158.

(2) Where client supplied securities for creation of inter vivos trust by attorney solely for purpose of freeing client from annoyance by beneficiary, and trust agreement provided that on death of beneficiary principal was to be paid over to attorney if living or to such person as he might nominate, attorney's interest in trust was not a "reversion" but a power of appointment.—Guaranty Trust Co. of N.Y. v. New York Trust Co., 74 N.E.2d 232, 297 N.Y. 45.

86. Ohio.—Boltz v. Riley, 18 Ohio Cir.Ct.N.S., 71, 34 Ohio Cir.Ct. 178.

attempted to be created;<sup>87</sup> similarly, the person or persons by whom a power is to be exercised must in some manner be designated or pointed out by the instrument creating the power, and, if no person is designated, either expressly or by implication, to exercise it the power is ineffective.<sup>88</sup> An express trust for a purpose not within a statute enumerating the purposes for which an express trust may be created may be given effect as a power in trust if the purpose is one which may be lawfully exercised.<sup>89</sup>

Dispositions or provisions inconsistent with power. The mere fact that the donor of a power makes other disposition of, or provisions as to, the subject matter does not necessarily affect the power; but the instrument will be so construed, if possible, as to reconcile the inconsistency and give effect to all of its provisions.<sup>90</sup> In so far, however, as a power is repugnant to another disposition or provision made by the instrument containing it, the power is void.<sup>91</sup> A power of appointment may exist in conjunction with a transfer in trust or independent of such transfer.<sup>92</sup>

§ 11. Validity

The validity of a power depends on its nature and not on its execution. A power inseparably connected with other provisions affecting the subject matter which are invalid or impossible of accomplishment is itself inoperative.

The validity of a power depends on its nature and not on its execution,<sup>93</sup> and consequently a power capable of being validly exercised is not void because under it the donee might attempt to create an illegal estate,<sup>94</sup> but is in legal effect a power to do what is lawful and not what is unlawful.<sup>95</sup> A power which is not presently exercisable or with certainty exercisable in the future is a nullity.<sup>96</sup>

Invalidity or failure of other dispositions or provisions. Where a power is inseparably connected with, or dependent on, other dispositions of or provisions as to the subject matter which are invalid or impossible of accomplishment, the power itself fails;<sup>97</sup> but such invalidity or impossibility of other provisions will not cause the failure of a power otherwise valid which is not so connected with or dependent on them.<sup>98</sup>

Relief against invalidity. Equity will not interfere in behalf of the grantee of a power or of one in whose favor it has been exercised to supply a defect in the creation of the power.<sup>99</sup>

§ 12. — Partial Invalidity

A power does not necessarily fail because it is invalid with respect to one of its purposes or beneficiaries.

A power for several purposes does not fail because among them is one which is void or has lapsed;<sup>1</sup> and a power void as to some of the persons for whose benefit it was to be exercised is not necessarily void as to others.<sup>2</sup>

Class of persons

III. MODIFICATION OR REVOCATION, AND SUSPENSION

§ 13. Revocability

A mere naked power may be revoked at will, but a power coupled with an interest or given for a valuable consideration or as security is irrevocable.

A mere naked power is revocable at the will of the donor or grantor;<sup>3</sup> but, where a power is coupled with an interest,<sup>4</sup> or is given for a valuable consideration<sup>5</sup> or as security,<sup>6</sup> it is irrevocable.

§ 14. Manner of Revocation or Modification

A duly created power can be revoked only in express terms or by necessary implication.

A duly created power cannot be revoked or modified except in express terms or by necessary implication.<sup>7</sup> Thus a power is not necessarily revoked by the grant of a similar power to another person,<sup>8</sup> or by the donor's execution of a contract to sell the property forming the subject matter of the power,<sup>9</sup> or by codicils changing the legatees or devisees of property over which the power of sale was given by the will.<sup>10</sup>

§ 15. Suspension

A power may be suspended in the sense that its exercise may be made dependent on the happening of a future event.

Where the exercise of a power is made dependent on the happening of a future event, the effectual exercise of the power is suspended until that event happens.<sup>11</sup> Where a power coupled with an interest or a mere naked authority devolves on an insane person, it is suspended during the continuance of the disability.<sup>12</sup>

IV. DURATION AND TERMINATION

§ 16. In General

The duration of a power depends on the intention of the grantor, the purposes in view, and the circumstances surrounding the transaction. Generally speaking, a power subsists until, but not after, its purpose ceases or is accomplished or the power is exhausted or becomes impossible of execution.

The duration of a power is dependent on the intention of the grantor or donor, as shown by the terms of the instrument creating it, the purposes had in view, and the circumstances surrounding the transaction.<sup>13</sup> A power given to trustees ordinarily continues during the life of the trust and ceases on its termination.<sup>14</sup>

or impossibility of execution. In general a power duly created is valid and subsisting until its purpose, as determined from the whole intent of the instrument of creation, is spent;<sup>15</sup> and a mere change in circumstances will not cause the power to terminate if the purpose for which it was created still remains to be effectuated.<sup>16</sup> A power ceases, however, on the accomplishment or cesser of the purpose of its creation,<sup>17</sup> or on its exhaustion,<sup>18</sup> or where its execution becomes impossible or its purpose unattainable.<sup>19</sup>

§ 17. Death of Donor, Donee, or Beneficiary

A naked power is terminated by the death of the donor unless the power necessarily is such as can be exercised only after his death, but a donor's death does not terminate a power coupled with an interest; the donee's death terminates the power granted to him; the death of the beneficiary of a power does not terminate the power unless such death terminates the purpose of the power or renders its effectuation impossible.

A mere naked or collateral power is revoked by the death of the donor or grantor,<sup>20</sup> unless it is necessarily such as can be exercised only after his death;<sup>21</sup> but the donor's death does not revoke or terminate a power coupled with an interest.<sup>22</sup>

Death of donee. A power necessarily ceases on the death of the donee or grantee, where there is no one else authorized to execute it;<sup>23</sup> but, as discussed infra § 35, where so provided, expressly or by implication, by the instrument of creation, the power may continue to exist in the assignee, representative, or successor of the donee after his death. Where the donee of a power given by the will of another dies before the testator, the power is a nullity.<sup>24</sup>

Death of beneficiary. While the death of one for whose benefit a power is created will not extinguish the power where it can still be exercised consistently with the purpose of its creation,<sup>25</sup> if the death of the beneficiary defeats or terminates the purpose of the power or renders its effectuation impossible, the power is thereby terminated.<sup>26</sup>

§ 18. Merger

Where the donee of a power is also given or becomes entitled to the fee or entire estate, the power is merged into the fee, and becomes inoperative.

Where the donee of a power is also given or becomes entitled to the fee or entire estate, the power is merged into the fee, and becomes inoperative.<sup>27</sup> A power, however, may subsist in one to whom the fee or entire estate is limited in default of execution of the power, without merging in the fee.<sup>28</sup>

§ 19. Release or Other Extinguishment by Donee

A power appendant, appurtenant, or in gross, as well as a general beneficial power, may ordinarily be released or extinguished by the donee or grantee, but, when a power is coupled with a trust, it cannot be released or

Power to keep or dispose

Powers which give to donee the right to keep or to dispose of property are the same as powers which arise as an incident of ownership, and such powers do not terminate on donee's death, and donee has such an interest in property as to make him in substance the owner thereof.—In re Wadleigh's Estate, 26 N.W.2d 667, 250 Wis. 284.

extinguished without the consent of all the parties; a naked or collateral power cannot ordinarily be extinguished by any act of the donee.

A power appendant, appurtenant, or in gross may be released or extinguished by the donee or grantee,<sup>29</sup> unless it is coupled with a trust,<sup>30</sup> and even in the latter case the power may be extinguished by the consent of all the parties,<sup>31</sup> but not, it has been held, at least with respect to a special power in trust, by the joint act of the grantor and grantee, without the consent of the persons within the class of permissible appointees.<sup>32</sup> A general beneficial power may always be surrendered by the grantee or donee and thus extinguished,<sup>33</sup> provided the donor's intention is not thereby frustrated;<sup>34</sup> thus, when a power is one which the donee may exercise for his own benefit, it may be extinguished by his act.<sup>35</sup> Even a special power, when not coupled with a trust, may be surrendered, renounced, or released and thereby extinguished.<sup>36</sup> Unless permitted by statute,<sup>37</sup> however, a mere naked or collateral power cannot be extinguished by any act of the donee.<sup>38</sup>

Any dealing by the donee of an extinguishable power with the property forming its subject matter which is inconsistent with the exercise of the power puts an end to it;<sup>39</sup> but such donee may ab-

Where an irrevocable deed of trust provided life estate for settlor's wife and reserved to settlor a general power of appointment of the corpus by will, settlor by subsequent inter vivos deed without the joinder of wife could extinguish such power of appointment and direct that after death of settlor and wife corpus should be distributed to a corporation for the benefit of settlor's creditors, since extinguishment of such power did not affect wife's interest in trust.—In re Jackson's Trust, 40 A.2d 393, 351 Pa. 89.

V. CONSTRUCTION

§ 20. General Considerations

Powers are construed according to the principles of the common law where the rule has not been changed by statutory provision.

Except as the rule may be changed by statutory provision, powers are construed according to the principles of the common law.<sup>44</sup> It has been said that perhaps on no other subject of the law have there been employed so many legal refinements, or such technical disquisition, as in the construction of powers.<sup>45</sup>

§ 21. — What Law Governs

Ordinarily the character and extent of a power are to be determined with respect to the law of the domicile of the donor or grantor, not the law of the situs of the property to which the power applies.

Although there is authority to the contrary,<sup>46</sup> it is ordinarily held that the character and extent of a power are to be determined with respect to the law of the domicile of the donor or grantor, not the law of the situs of the property to which the power applies.<sup>47</sup> A general power of appointment is not subject to the principle of comity, either as to creation or interpretation.<sup>48</sup>

guage used in the instrument of creation,<sup>51</sup> and the surrounding facts and circumstances may be considered in determining the donor's intent if an ambiguity is found in the instrument by which the power was created.<sup>52</sup> However, the donor's intention is not to be thwarted by refinements and distinctions resting on subtlety and ingenuity, lack of technical accuracy in the use of words, unduly stressing the literal meaning of a few words, or attaching to them a hard and fast meaning not in accordance with the setting in which they were employed.<sup>53</sup>

A power general in terms will not be cut down to a special or particular power, unless an intent to do so is apparent from the instrument conferring the power;<sup>54</sup> and, on the other hand, a power may not be extended beyond its express terms and the clear intention of the donor.<sup>55</sup> In furtherance of the object in view, the courts will vary the form of executing the power, and, as the case may require, either enlarge a limited to a general power, or cut down a general power to a particular purpose.<sup>56</sup> A particular intent will be made to yield to the general intent, where one is inconsistent with the other.<sup>57</sup>

b. Liberal or Strict Construction

Some authorities, but not others, hold that all powers are to be construed liberally in furtherance of the purpose for which they were created.

While it has been held broadly that instruments creating powers are to be strictly construed,<sup>58</sup> there is authority for the view that all powers are to be construed liberally in equity, in furtherance of the purpose for which they were created.<sup>59</sup> A distinction has been drawn between naked powers and powers coupled with an interest by some authorities, which hold that the latter are to be construed more liberally than the former.<sup>60</sup> A further distinction is sometimes drawn between conveyances wherein it is the object of the grantor to convey his property and to retain a future power in himself of disposing of it, but to restrict himself in the exercise of that power to a particular mode, and conveyances wherein it is his object to place the property entirely beyond his own control, but to confer on a third person the power of changing the disposition of it, it being held that in the former case the restraining words or phrases ought to receive such a construction as is most favorable to the owner,<sup>61</sup> but in the latter case they should be taken in such sense as to operate most efficaciously in favor of the donee.<sup>62</sup>

c. Limitations and Restrictions

When no condition is actually annexed to a power, one need not be sought out, and everything which is legal and within the limits of the power should be supported; but, where there is a prohibition, limitation, or restriction in a power, such provision will control and the donee will not be permitted to disregard it.

When no condition is actually annexed to a power, one need not be sought out;<sup>63</sup> and everything which is legal and within the limits of the power should be supported.<sup>64</sup> Where a donor creates a power of appointment, it is inferable that he intends the donee to be unrestricted in its exercise except as restrictions are affirmatively imposed.<sup>65</sup> If an inconsistency exists in an instrument creating a power between the terms of an in-

The nature and extent of the power granted generally depend on the terms of the instrument of creation,<sup>68</sup> and ordinarily a court has no jurisdiction to enlarge such power.<sup>69</sup> A power cannot transcend the limits on it set by the donor.<sup>70</sup> A greater power includes a lesser power only when the lesser power is of the same character with the greater and essential to its execution.<sup>71</sup>

a. In General

An absolute power to dispose of property embraces all powers necessary to effect the disposition; but the exercise of a power of appointment is limited to the exact performance of the duty imposed on the donee, and a court has no jurisdiction to enlarge the power granted, where such power is limited by the instrument creating it.

Generally speaking, an absolute power to dispose of property embraces all powers necessary to effect the disposition.<sup>72</sup> The exercise of a power of appointment is limited to the exact performance of the duty imposed on the donee or appointor,<sup>73</sup> and, where a power of appointment is limited by the instrument creating it, a court has no jurisdiction to enlarge such power.<sup>74</sup> If, by the terms of the instrument creating a power of appointment or revocation, its exercise is left to the discretion of the donee, the exercise of such discretion will not be interfered with, in the absence of bad faith.<sup>75</sup> Where a grant of a conditional fee or even a life estate is made to a survivor with full power of disposition, he may dispose of the property as he sees fit during his lifetime.<sup>76</sup> An appointment for an illegal purpose is void, although the form and method of appointment are legal.<sup>77</sup>

General or special power. In accordance with the general rules, discussed supra § 6, as to what constitutes a general power or a special power, and the general rules as to the construction of powers, considered supra § 22, particular instruments have been construed as conferring<sup>78</sup> or as not confer-

Power to appoint by last will such persons as in donee's sole judgment and discretion might be worthy to receive residue of donor's estate and to fix the amount to be given to each was a "general" and not a "special" power.—O'Hara v. O'Hara, 44 A.2d 813, 185 Md. 321, 163 A.L.R. 1444.

Test

Fact that the donee of a power of appointment is free to select the beneficiary is not the sole test of the generality of the power but it must also be clear that the donee has an absolute disposing power over the estate.—Hooker v. Drayton, 33 A.2d 206, 69 R.I. 290, 150 A.L.R. 723.

ring<sup>79</sup> a general power of appointment or disposition. A "general power of appointment" is not converted into a "special power of appointment" by reason of spendthrift provisions protecting the income during the lifetime of the donee of the power.<sup>80</sup> The rights of a donee of a general power are not lessened by the donor's insertion of provisions to take effect only in default of appointment.<sup>81</sup> Accordingly, a gift over to persons who are to take in the event that a general power of appointment is not exercised by the donee does not of itself cut down or restrict the extent of the power, but there must, in addition, be a clear intent, expressed or implied, that the donor meant to give only a special or limited power.<sup>82</sup>

tion, and necessarily depends on the terms of the instrument creating the power.<sup>83</sup>

Word "request," as used in a power, with respect to persons to whom appointment may be made, may be used as a command or an intreaty depending on the context in which the word is asserted, and the circumstances attendant on its use, but the real test is whether or not the donor of the power intended by his language to control the disposition of his property.—*Marx v. ## (2) Under Special or Limited Power

- (a) In general
- (b) Children, issue, or descendants
- (c) Other relatives and relations

(a) In General

Where a power of appointment is not general, but limited to certain beneficiaries or to a certain class of beneficiaries, it can be exercised only in favor of such beneficiaries or class, and any attempt to exercise it in favor of others is void.

Where a power of appointment is not general, but limited to certain beneficiaries or to a certain class of beneficiaries, it may and must be exercised in favor of such beneficiaries or class, and any attempt to exercise it in favor of others is void,<sup>94</sup> at least in so far as the power is exceeded, as discussed infra § 47, whether the appointment is made directly or indirectly in favor of a stranger.<sup>95</sup> Thus, an attempt to exercise such a power wholly or partially in favor of the donee himself or of his estate is invalid, if he is not within the specified class of beneficiaries;<sup>96</sup> and so is an attempt to exercise it in favor of the parent<sup>97</sup> or the children or other descendants<sup>98</sup> of a beneficiary.

Corporations. An appointment may be made to a corporation under a power to appoint to any "person."<sup>99</sup> A power to appoint to a corporation authorizes an appointment to a municipal corporation,<sup>1</sup> or to a corporation to be formed under directions contained in the instrument executing the power.<sup>2</sup>

(b) Children, Issue, or Descendants

A power to appoint property to or among the children generally, or particular children, of a donor, donee, or other designated person ordinarily does not authorize either a general or partial appointment to his grandchild dren or remoter descendants, but a power to appoint to or among the issue or descendants of a designated person usually authorizes an appointment to any of his descendants, of any degree of remoteness.

Except when otherwise provided by statute,<sup>3</sup> a power to appoint property to or among the children generally, or particular children, of a donor, donee, or other designated person does not authorize either a general or partial appointment to his grandchildren or remoter descendants,<sup>4</sup> or to any other person,<sup>5</sup> even though there are no children living at the time the power is attempted to be executed,<sup>6</sup> unless an intention to include grandchildren or other descendants is manifest from the instrument creating the power.<sup>7</sup> Power to appoint to children does not include the spouse of a child.<sup>8</sup>

Issue or descendants. A power to appoint to or among the issue or descendants of a designated person authorizes an appointment to any of his descendants, of any degree of remoteness,<sup>9</sup> unless the context or other provisions of the instrument in which it is used, and such circumstances as may legitimately bear in that direction, show the term to have been used in the more restricted sense of "children."<sup>10</sup> Where a power of appointment is created in favor of a particular person "or" his issue or descendants, it has been held that the word "or" is to be taken in a discretionary, rather than a substitutional, sense, and that the power may be exercised in favor of the issue or descendants to the exclusion of the designated person.<sup>11</sup> A power to appoint to or among the issue of such children of a designated power as may die before him is improperly exercised by an appointment to the issue of living children.<sup>12</sup>

(c) Other Relatives and Relations

Where a donee has an exclusive power to appoint to or among the relatives or relations of himself or another, the power extends to remote relatives, and is not confined to the next of kin.

Where a donee has an exclusive power to appoint to or among the relatives or relations of himself or another, the power extends to remote relatives, and is not confined to the next of kin.<sup>13</sup> Where, however, the donee has a nonexclusive or merely distributive power to appoint among relatives, and not among such of them as he thinks proper, he is confined in his appointment to the next of kin within the statute of descent and distribution.<sup>14</sup> Under a power given the donor's daughter to appoint to the donor's relations of the "full-blood," appointment is permissible only to the donor's brothers and sisters, and an attempted appointment of the children and grandchildren of a cousin of the donee is invalid.<sup>15</sup> A bequest of a life beneficiary to his nephews is within the donee's power of appointment to "kindred."<sup>16</sup>

Family. The term "family," as used in a power to give to any of the male descendants of the "family" of a testator bearing his surname, has been held to mean "children" of the testator.<sup>17</sup>

Nephews and nieces. A power to appoint to or among nephews and nieces does not extend to grandnephews and grandnieces.<sup>18</sup> on the character of the power as determined from the instrument creating it.

Powers of appointment to a class are either exclusive or nonexclusive,<sup>19</sup> and the shares to be appointed and the donee's right to select or exclude appointees depend on the character of the power as determined from the instrument creating it.<sup>20</sup>

Under exclusive power. A power is exclusive when there is granted to the donee the right to appoint to any of the designated objects to the exclusion of others;<sup>21</sup> and so such a power may be exercised by the donee by appointing to such of the objects, excluding others, and in such share, as he may see fit.<sup>22</sup>

Under nonexclusive power. A power of appointment is nonexclusive when no right of selection among the objects or of exclusion of any of them is given to the donee.<sup>23</sup> So, under a power containing no words of exclusion, the property must be so distributed, if the power is exercised, that all the objects shall have some portion of it,<sup>24</sup> and the exclusion of any member of the designated class in making the appointments invalidates the attempted exercise of the power.<sup>25</sup> Unless an intention is shown in the instrument creating a nonexclusive power of appointment that the appointees shall take equally,<sup>26</sup> the donee may appoint such shares as he thinks fit,<sup>27</sup> subject to the rules relating to illusory appointments as discussed infra § 45.

d. Estates or Interests to Be Appointed

Generally, the donee of a power of appointment can appoint such an estate or interest only as is authorized by the instrument creating the power, and not a greater or lesser one; but, if there is no restriction as to the estate or interest to be raised by the execution of the power, or if the matter is expressly left to the discretion of the donee, he may appoint any estate or interest which the donor of the power could have created or transferred.

As a general rule, the donee of a power of appointment can appoint such an estate or interest only as is authorized by the instrument creating the power, and not a greater or lesser one.<sup>28</sup> If, however, there is no restriction as to the estate or interest to be raised by the execution of the power, or if the matter is expressly left to the discretion of the donee, he may appoint any estate or interest which the donor of the power could have created or transferred.<sup>29</sup> Accordingly, where the power is general, the donee of the power may appoint to various persons in varying amounts.<sup>30</sup>

Estates in fee. An unrestricted power to appoint or dispose of property authorizes the appointment of a fee or absolute interest, although no words of inheritance are contained in the power;<sup>31</sup> but a fee cannot be appointed where the power authorizes the appointment of a less estate only.<sup>32</sup>

Limited estates. Whether a donee having a power to appoint absolutely may carve out a lesser estate or interest depends on the application of the rule of reasonable construction.<sup>33</sup> Generally, where a power to dispose of property is a general one, inferior estates or interests may be legally conveyed.<sup>34</sup> Accordingly, under a general power to appoint, or a power to appoint limited merely as to the objects, the donee is not restricted to an appointment in fee simple, but may appoint lesser or qualified estates in the subject matter;<sup>35</sup> but the rule may be otherwise where the appointment of a lesser estate is inconsistent with the terms and intent of the power,<sup>36</sup> and, if the power expressly or by clear implication requires that an estate in fee, and no other, shall be appointed, a less estate than a fee cannot be given by the donee,<sup>37</sup> and so it would seem that, where the class of objects of a special power contains but one member at the time the power is executed, the donee has no authority to appoint an estate less than a fee.<sup>38</sup> It has been held that the assertion that, in the absence of express prohibition, the power to appoint a fee includes the power to appoint a lesser estate is not a rule of universal application but at most a doctrine of equity limited to particular cases, which must be applied with consideration of its effect on the intent and purpose of the donor, the nature of the power, and the special circumstances.<sup>39</sup>

Appointments in trust. Under a power of appointment, either general or special, containing no restriction as to the nature of the estate to be raised, the donee is not limited to an appointment of the legal estate, but may execute the power by an appointment in trust for the objects of the power,<sup>40</sup> except where it appears, either expressly or im-

Decision construed

It has been held that the court in Matter of Kennedy's Will, supra, did not intend to jettison the well-understood rule that the power to appoint a fee includes the power to appoint a lesser estate, but merely held the rule inapplicable to the particular state of facts then before it.—In re Hart's Will, 28 N.Y.S.2d 781, 262 App.Div. 190, appeal granted 44 N.E.2d 620, 289 N.Y. 646.

pliedly, from the instrument creating the power that the donor intended the appointees to take, not in trust, but absolutely.<sup>41</sup> On the other hand, where the instrument creating a power of appointment expressly or by clear implication provides that the appointment shall be made in trust for the objects of the power, the donee cannot appoint an absolute estate.<sup>42</sup> If the power is to appoint in a certain manner or to certain persons, or to declare certain trusts or uses, the donee can create such trusts only as are within the power.<sup>43</sup>

e. Authority Included in Power of Appointment

A power to appoint property may include the power to appoint with conditions and charges attached, or the donee may have power to sell the property and divide the proceeds, to convey or mortgage the property, or to make advancements to or among the objects of the power.

Unless the donor manifests a contrary intent, the donee of a general power of appointment may make appointments with conditions and charges attached provided they are lawful in themselves.<sup>44</sup> A power to appoint land authorizes in equity, a charge thereon for the benefit of an object of the power;<sup>45</sup> and so a power to appoint to or among the members of a designated class is properly executed by appointing the property in fee to one or more of the class and charging it with pecuniary legacies in favor of the others.<sup>46</sup>

sell the property and divide the proceeds among the objects of the power,<sup>47</sup> unless it appears from the instrument creating the power that it was intended that the objects of the power should take the property itself and not the proceeds thereof.<sup>48</sup>

To convey. Where the intention of the donor, as shown by the instrument creating a power of appointment, can be as effectually carried out by a conveyance as by an appointment, a conveyance by the donee is a valid execution of the power.<sup>49</sup>

To mortgage. A general or unrestricted power of appointment may validly be exercised by mortgage;<sup>50</sup> but, where the donee's right to alienate the property is restricted to a sale for reinvestment, a mortgage or encumbrance is not authorized.<sup>51</sup> Where such a mortgage duly executed under an unrestricted power provides that, in case of a sale thereunder, any overplus remaining after paying the debt secured thereby shall be paid to the mortgagor, his heirs, representatives, or assigns, or otherwise disposes of the surplus or equity of redemption, it is a total appointment under the power.<sup>52</sup> In the absence of such provision, however, the mortgage is only a pro tanto exercise of the power and the balance remains unexecuted.<sup>53</sup>

To make advances. A power of appointment may expressly or by implication include authority to make advancements to or among the objects of the power;<sup>54</sup> but, in the absence of any such provision, a nonexclusive power to appoint or divide does not authorize the donee to make advances to

f. Purposes of Appointment; Conditions

A power of appointment cannot be validly exercised otherwise than for the purposes intended by the donor, as shown by the instrument creating the power.<sup>56</sup>

Power dependent on condition. Where a power of appointment or revocation is given conditionally on the happening or nonhappening of a specified event, it arises only on the fulfillment of the condition.<sup>57</sup> If, however, the condition is one to be determined by the exercise of judgment or discretion, the donee's decision, if made in good faith, is conclusive as to his right to the power.<sup>58</sup>

- a. In general
- b. Property, estates, or interests included

a. In General

The scope and extent of a power of sale or exchange are to be determined from the instrument by which the power was created, and such a power can be exercised only for the purpose, if any, pointed out in the instrument of creation, and on fulfillment of the condition or happening of the contingency on which the power may be made dependent.

The scope and extent of a power of sale or exchange are to be determined from the instrument by which the power was created.<sup>59</sup>

Purpose of sale. A power of sale can be exercised only for the purpose or purposes, if any, pointed out in the instrument of creation,<sup>60</sup> in determining which the intent of the donor, as shown by the terms of the instrument, governs,<sup>61</sup> although, if the purpose or its accomplishment involves the exercise of judgment or discretion, the donee, acting in good faith, is the sole judge thereof.<sup>62</sup> If the power is unrestricted or is given for any purpose the donee may deem advisable, it may be exercised in the discretion of the donee.<sup>63</sup>

Power dependent on condition or contingency. A power of sale dependent on a condition or contingency becomes operative on the fulfillment of the condition or happening of the contingency,<sup>64</sup> but not before such event.<sup>65</sup> Thus, a power to sell when necessary for the support and maintenance of the donee or another is contingent on such necessity;<sup>66</sup> but the donee is ordinarily the sole judge of whether or not a sale is necessary,<sup>67</sup> unless he acts in bad faith.<sup>68</sup> determined, by the application of the ordinary rules of construction, from the terms of the instrument by which the power was conferred, viewed, if necessary, in the light of the circumstances surrounding the creation of the power.

The property, estates, or interests to be included in, or subject to, a power of sale or exchange are to be determined, by the application of the ordinary rules of construction, from the terms of the instrument by which the power was conferred, viewed, if necessary, in the light of the circumstances surrounding the creation of the power.<sup>69</sup> Property specially devised or bequeathed is not included in a power given in general terms, in the absence of any apparent intention to the contrary;<sup>70</sup> and it has been held that a cemetery lot is not included in such a power.<sup>71</sup> A power of sale is inapplicable to property sold by the donor by an executory contract before the power became effective.<sup>72</sup>

The interest or estate which may be conveyed under a power of sale or exchange is to be determined from the terms of the instrument by which the power was created.

The interest or estate which may be conveyed under a power of sale or exchange is to be determined from the terms of the instrument by which the power was created.<sup>75</sup> Where the power is conferred on one to whom an estate for life or other particular interest or estate is conveyed or given by the same instrument, the donee has power to convey only such particular estate,<sup>76</sup> except when an intention that a larger interest may be conveyed clearly appears, in which case it is ordinarily construed to authorize the disposal of a fee simple;<sup>77</sup> and a power to sell property in which another has a life estate cannot be exercised to deprive the life tenant of his estate without his consent.<sup>78</sup> A power to sell a fee ordinarily includes the power to sell a lesser estate or interest,<sup>79</sup> or to grant an easement.<sup>80</sup>

d. Authority Incidental to Power

- (1) In general
- (2) To transfer without sale
- (3) To mortgage, pledge, or hypothecate
- (4) To lease or partition

(1) In General

The donee of a power of sale generally has incidental authority to do such acts as will effectuate the intention of the donor, as shown by the instrument creating the power; but the donee is not authorized to deal with the property otherwise than in accordance with the donor's intention.

The donee of a power of sale has, generally speaking, incidental authority to do such acts as will effectuate the intention of the donor, as shown by the instrument creating the power;<sup>81</sup> and so a power to sell includes power to convey,<sup>82</sup> or to assign, in the case of a chose in action.<sup>83</sup> The donee is not, however, authorized to deal with the property otherwise than in accordance with the donor's intention.<sup>84</sup>

To exchange under power of sale. A power to sell ordinarily does not include the power to barter

Conveyance and reconveyance

Where grantor in fee reserved power of sale for own benefit, his subsequent conveyance to intermediary and reconveyance, for purpose of revesting land in grantor, were valid.—Harman v. Hurst, 153 A. 24, 160 Md. 96.

Rights of remainderman

(1) Where grantor conveyed property and on same day accepted a reconveyance of life estate in the property with power to sell, lease, mortgage, and encumber the property, the estate in remainder was divested by grantor's subsequent conveyance of both life estate and remainder to another after death of remainderman.—Borgman v. Lassahn, 2 A.2d 440, 175 Md. 695.

(2) Where owner of life estate with power of sale annexed sold realty before his death but received only a portion of the purchase price, life tenant's estate and not remainderman was entitled to the remainder of the purchase money.—Takacs v. Doerfer, 48 A.2d 328, 187 Md. 62.

or exchange,<sup>85</sup> although, where a power to sell land and invest the proceeds in other land is conferred, a direct exchange is a valid execution of the power.<sup>86</sup>

To sell under power of exchanging. A power to exchange does not authorize a sale or transfer of the subject matter partially or wholly for money.<sup>87</sup>

(2) To Transfer without Sale

Where the purposes for which a power of sale was created can be fully accomplished by a transfer without sale, such a transfer will be upheld as a substantial execution of the power; but, where the power can only be executed according to the donor's intention by a sale, a transfer without sale is not authorized.

Where the purposes for which a power of sale was created can be fully accomplished by a transfer without sale, such a transfer will be upheld as a substantial execution of the power;<sup>88</sup> and so a donee having authority to receive the proceeds of sale and appropriate them to his own use may convey the property in payment of a debt.<sup>89</sup> Where, however, the power can only be executed according to the donor's intention by a sale, a transfer without sale is not authorized.<sup>90</sup> Where a conveyance gives the power to sell specifically, it has been held to exclude by implication any power to convey the property by will.<sup>91</sup>

without consideration, and such a transfer is void.<sup>92</sup>

Election of beneficiaries to take property in lieu of proceeds. Where all the beneficiaries who are distributees of the proceeds of the sale of property authorized to be sold under a power join in asking a transfer or conveyance of the property to themselves, according to their respective shares, and such a course does not substantially conflict with the purpose of the gift, a conveyance is proper,<sup>93</sup> provided all of such beneficiaries are sui juris,<sup>94</sup> and the rights of others will not be affected by such conveyance;<sup>95</sup> but, where any beneficiary fails to consent to such transfer, it cannot be made.<sup>96</sup>

(3) To Mortgage, Pledge, or Hypothecate

Whether or not the donee of a power of sale may execute a mortgage of the property subject to the power, or pledge or hypothecate such property depends on the donor's intent as indicated by his language and his object in creating the power.

While there is authority to the contrary,<sup>97</sup> it is a general rule that a power of sale does not authorize a mortgage or deed of trust.<sup>98</sup> However, the general rule is subject to the qualification that whether the donee of a power of sale may execute a mortgage depends on the donor's intent as indicated by his language and his object in creating the power,<sup>99</sup> and, where the power was created for the accomplishment of a purpose which may be realized by mortgaging the property,<sup>1</sup> as where it

Participation by donor

Fact that donor of power with claim for annuity against life tenant, who had power to "sell" for reinvestment in land, qualifiedly joined in mortgage to pay life tenant's debts, did not make mortgage good against remaindermen—Chenault's Guardian v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 53 S.W.2d 720, 245 Ky. 482.

99. Ky.—Gaither v. Gaither, 155 S.W.2d 746, 288 Ky. 145.

There must be some clear extrinsic indication of intention before a "power of disposition" will be held to authorize a mortgage—Manion v. Peoples Bank of Johnstown, 38 N.Y.S.2d 484, affirmed 44 N.Y.S.2d 593, 266 App.Div. 1043, reversed on other grounds 55 N.E.2d 46, 292 N.Y. 317.

1. Ky.—Gaither v. Gaither, 155 S.W.2d 746, 288 Ky. 145—Corpus Juris cited in Morgan v. Meacham, was given for raising a particular charge, subject to which the property is settled or devised,<sup>2</sup> the court may under the circumstances support a mortgage as within the donor's intention, unless a contrary intent appears.<sup>3</sup> Where an absolute and unrestricted power to sell for the donee's own benefit is conferred, it may ordinarily be executed by a mortgage, in the absence of any circumstances indicating a contrary intention.<sup>4</sup>

A power to sell or otherwise "dispose" of the subject matter has been held to authorize a mortgage,<sup>5</sup> but in other cases the power to mortgage has been denied under such a power.<sup>6</sup> It has also been held that a power to "sell and convey" property does not carry with it the power to mortgage.<sup>7</sup>

To pledge or hypothecate. While it has been held without qualification that a power to sell includes a power to make a conditional sale of the subject matter by hypothecation,<sup>8</sup> it would seem that the existence of the right depends on the intention of the donor as expressed in the instrument creating the power, and so authority to pledge or hypothecate the subject matter of the power has variously been held to be included,<sup>9</sup> and not to be included,<sup>10</sup> in particular powers of sale.

(4) To Lease or Partition

A power to sell ordinarily does not authorize a lease; but a power to sell and exchange includes a power to make partition.

A power to sell ordinarily does not authorize a lease,<sup>11</sup> although the donee of a power to sell and dispose of property has been held to have power to lease it where circumstances justified such action, in pursuance of the purpose for which the power was created.<sup>12</sup>

To partition. A power to sell and exchange includes a power to make partition;<sup>13</sup> and it has been held by some authorities that a power merely to sell will authorize a partition;<sup>14</sup> but there are also other decisions to the contrary.<sup>15</sup>

e. Terms of Sale

Where the instrument conferring a power to sell does not prescribe the terms on which sale is to be made, the donee is authorized to sell on such terms as will carry out the intention of the donor; but generally a power of sale gives authority to sell only for money, and only for cash and not on credit.

Where the instrument conferring a power to sell does not prescribe the terms on which sale is to be made, the donee is authorized to sell on such terms as will carry out the intention of the donor.<sup>16</sup> As a general rule, a power of sale gives authority to sell only for money,<sup>17</sup> and only for cash and not on credit,<sup>18</sup> although, where the donee has power to invest the proceeds, it may be proper to take a mortgage for a part of the sale price;<sup>19</sup> and, where a sale for cash is in terms required by the instrument creating the power, a sale on credit is unauthorized.<sup>20</sup> In the absence of any apparent intention to the contrary, the donee has power to sell by executory contract as well as by deed of bargain and sale.<sup>21</sup>

§ 26. — Power to Mortgage

Whether or not a power to mortgage is reserved or conferred, and, if so, the scope and extent of the power, are questions which depend wholly on the construction of the instrument under which the power is claimed.

Whether or not a power to mortgage is reserved or conferred, and, if so, the scope and extent of the power, are questions which depend wholly on the construction of the instrument under which the power is claimed.<sup>22</sup> A mortgage given for an unauthorized purpose is void.<sup>23</sup> A power to mortgage to secure borrowed money gives no authority to mortgage for the payment of debts theretofore contracted by the donor;<sup>24</sup> but a power to encumber by mortgage has been held to include power to extend an outstanding mortgage on the property<sup>25</sup> and to authorize renewals.<sup>26</sup> A power is not exhausted by one mortgage, in the absence of any such restriction, and the donee may remortgage the property for a purpose for which the power was given.<sup>27</sup>

§ 27. — Power to Lease

Powers to lease are ordinarily to be construed liberally according to the apparent intention of the parties.

Powers to lease are ordinarily to be construed liberally according to the apparent intention of the parties.<sup>28</sup> A power to lease does not include power to sell<sup>29</sup> or to give away<sup>30</sup> the subject matter of the power. A power to lease real estate authorizes the leasing of minerals in a mine on the land.<sup>31</sup>

Term. A power to lease ordinarily will not support a lease in reversion or to begin in futuro;<sup>32</sup> but, if the power to lease does not extend merely to leases in possession, the donee may grant a lease to begin in futuro.<sup>33</sup> Ordinarily, a donee having a life estate or other limited interest has no power to lease for a term beyond the duration of his estate.<sup>34</sup> Subject to the rights of remaindermen and reversioners, however, the donee may lease for such term as he may see fit,<sup>35</sup> unless the term is restricted by the instrument creating the power, in which case he cannot exceed the period so prescribed.<sup>36</sup>

Provisions of lease. The terms, covenants, and conditions which may or must be included in a lease under a power of leasing depend on the instrument by which the power is created, as where it provides for a lease on specified terms.<sup>37</sup>

§ 28. — Power to Charge

Authority to charge property under a power of appointment is considered supra § 24 e.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 29. — Power to Manage, Control, Improve, or Invest

The scope and extent of powers to manage, control, improve, or invest in property depend on the intention of the donor or creator as manifested by the terms of the instrument by which they are given.

Without regard to whether powers or authorities to manage or control property,<sup>38</sup> or to improve it,<sup>39</sup> or invest or reinvest,<sup>40</sup> are properly to be treated as "powers" within the meaning of the term as used in this title, it is clear that their scope and extent depend on the intention of the donor or creator as manifested by the terms of the instrument by which they are given. A power to manage or superintend does not authorize a sale or conveyance.<sup>41</sup>

§ 30. Effect of Existence of Power on Other Rights and Interests in Property

A power is ineffective until it is executed, and other rights and interests in the subject matter of the power are unaffected by its mere existence. Objects of the power have, by virtue merely of the existence of the power, no contingent interest or estate in the subject matter pending its exercise.

A power is ineffective until it is executed.<sup>42</sup> Other rights and interests in the subject matter of a power are unaffected by its mere existence,<sup>43</sup> and they may vest or take effect subject to the power,<sup>44</sup> although liable to destruction or divestment on its execution, as discussed infra § 49. Where an estate is given over in default of appointment, the nature of the estate of the remaindermen is not affected by the power of disposition until that power is exercised,<sup>45</sup> and the release of the power of appointment merely confirms the remainders vested by the original instrument of creation and does not create them.<sup>46</sup> Remainders given in default of exercise of a power of appointment to be executed by will cannot be destroyed during the life of the donee of the power, but only by his testamentary appointment.<sup>47</sup>

Objects of power have, by virtue merely of the existence of the power, no contingent interest or estate in the subject matter pending its exercise.<sup>48</sup>

§ 31. Interest of Donee or Grantee

A power does not of itself imply ownership or give the donee or grantee any interest or estate in the property, but, as an unrestricted power to transfer property, there inheres in a general power of appointment a measure of control proprietary in nature normally incident to ownership.

While a power may be coupled with an interest, as discussed supra § 8, or may be given to one having an interest or estate in the subject matter, supra § 5, a power does not of itself imply ownership,<sup>49</sup> but, on the contrary, excludes the idea of any ab-

Intent of instrument

Under instrument creating trust for benefit of settlors' son, conferring on son power of appointment

by will, and providing that on default of appointment or in so far as appointment should be ineffectual fund should be divided into as many shares as there should be lawful children of son at time of his death, with provision for each child to receive benefit of income from one share until child reached age of thirty, when share was to be transferred to him, and that the term "children" should include issue of deceased child per stirpes and not per capita, settlors intended that principal of trust should belong to children of their son.—*Merrill v. #### Investments by trustee

Where the exercise of a general power of appointment by the donee of the power under will was optional, investments by the donee, who was also the trustee, could not be challenged by those whom the trustee appointed, since the donee was under no obligation to prospective appointees and could commit no fraud against them.—Brown v. Fidelity Union Trust Co., 9 A.2d 311, 126 N.J.Eq. 406.

Gift, devise, or bequest

(1) An appointment under a testamentary power of appointment is not a "gift" of the donee's property.—Hooker v. Drayton, 33 A.2d 206, 69 R.I. 290, 150 A.L.R. 723.

(2) An "appointment" is not a "devise," "gift," or a "bequest" of the testator exercising a power of appointment, but the appointment is sui generis.—Hooker v. Drayton, supra.

solute interest or fee simple in the person possessing the power;<sup>50</sup> nor does a power of itself give the donee or grantee any interest or estate in the property.<sup>51</sup> The donee of a power of appointment is considered to be a mere agent of the donor,<sup>52</sup> and ordinarily the property subject to appointment is not alienable by him in his proprietary capacity;<sup>53</sup> nor is it subject to transfer by him except by appointment according to the instrument creating the power.<sup>54</sup> In other words, a general power of appointment under a trust does not have the elements of a title, estate, or ownership in the property as understood in the technically restricted acceptance of the term.<sup>55</sup>

As an unrestricted power to transfer property, however, there inheres in a general power of appointment a measure of control proprietary in nature normally incident to ownership,<sup>56</sup> and for many purposes, the donee of such a power is treated as the owner.<sup>57</sup> So it has been held that, where the donee exercises the power in conformity with the trust instrument, he has accepted the gift and it becomes his property to dispose of as he sees fit.<sup>58</sup> It has also been held that powers which give to the donee the right to keep or to dispose of property vest in the donee such an interest in the property as to make him in substance the owner thereof.<sup>59</sup> A power of sale with a provision that the proceeds belong to the donee vests beneficial title to the land in him.<sup>60</sup> A provision in a deed, reserving to the grantor power to sell and mortgage, has been held intended for the benefit of the grantor, entitling him to the proceeds on the exercise of the power.<sup>61</sup>

§ 32. — Rights of Creditors of Donee or Grantee

It is generally the rule that the creditors of the donee may not subject the appointive property to their claims, at least prior to the donee's exercise of the power, or in case of nonexecution of the power; but in some jurisdictions, where a general power of appointment is exercised in favor of a volunteer, the subject matter of the power will be treated in equity as assets for the payment of the debts of the donee of the power, to the exclusion of the appointee, if the donee's own estate is insufficient to satisfy their demands.

Since a power does not of itself give the donee or grantee any interest or estate in the property, as discussed supra § 31, it is generally the rule that the creditors of the donee may not subject such property to their claims, at least prior to the

donee's exercise of the power,<sup>62</sup> except as otherwise provided by statute.<sup>63</sup> So, on the nonexecution of a power of appointment or disposition, equity will not treat the subject matter of the power as assets of the donee for the benefit of his creditors, as against the person or persons entitled to it in default of appointment;<sup>64</sup> and the donee's creditors have no redress in the case of his failure to execute the power.<sup>65</sup>

On execution of power. It is the rule in some jurisdictions that on the execution of a general power of appointment, the creditors of the donee or grantee have no claim to the property in performance to the appointee named by the donee,<sup>66</sup> although a qualification to this rule has been held

Life estate changed into fee

Under statute providing conditions under which life estate shall be changed into a fee where there is no express trust, a grant or devise of land for life with power of disposition with remainder over creates, as far as creditors, purchasers, and encumbrancers of life tenant are concerned, a fee simple; and, where judgment creditor of life tenant, having power of disposition, causes property to be sold under execution, purchaser at execution sale occurring during lifetime of life tenant acquires an absolute fee title if no redemption is made from the sale, which cuts off the rights of the remaindermen.—Beliveau v. Beliveau, 14 N.W.2d 360, 217 Minn. 235.

Property to which applicable

The statute, whereby a general and beneficial power in a life tenant to be exercised by will creates a fee absolute as against the life tenant's creditors, applies to personal as well as real property.—City Bank Farmers Trust Co. v. Miller, 297 N.Y.S. 88, 163 Misc. 459, affirmed 1 N.Y.S. 2d 640, 253 App.Div. 707, reversed on other grounds 15 N.E.2d 553, 278 N.Y. 134.

Reason for rule

The donor of a power of appointment has the right to condition his bounty as he sees fit, and the creditors of the donee of the power have no reason to complain that the donor did not give his bounty to them.—Johnson v. Shriver, Colo., 216 P.2d 653.

Absence of fraud

Corpus of trust fund, created by deed directing payment of principal after settlor's death to her testamentary appointees, surviving issue or next of kin, cannot be attached after her death to satisfy her creditors, in absence of fraud in inception of trust or instrument creating it.—Mercantile Trust Co. of Baltimore v. Bergdorf & Goodman Co., 173 A. 31, 93 A.L.R. 1205.

On death of donee of general power, right to exercise it in favor of creditors passes from donee.—Leser v. Burnet, C.C.A., 46 F.2d 756.

Appointees held not mere "volunteers"

Where children, in order to provide for support of their mother, appointed themselves trustees of certain realty, title of which they retained, and they appointed their mother as their agent to control and manage the realty, and gave her power to convey realty to such person or persons as she should by her last will direct, but not otherwise, and they provided that the realty should not be subjected to payment of debts of mother, and provision in mother's will gave certain portions of the realty to her grandsons, and residuary clause provided that residue of estate should go to mother's children, mother did not appoint mere "volunteers" by will so as to give rise to rights in her creditors.—Johnson v. Shriver, Colo., 216 P. 2d 653.

When question determined

The question of blending of life tenant's estate with the appointed estate, and latter estate's liability for his debts, by execution of power of appointment in life tenant will not be determined on audit of account of his trustee filed on the falling in of the life estate; where the question arises, the practice is to award the fund to the donee's executor with instructions to segregate it and determine the question at the audit of his account.—In re Booth's Estate, 8 Pa.Dist. & Co. 116.

In Kentucky

(1) An early decision apparently followed a rule contrary to that stated in the text.—Boyce v. Waller, 9 Dana 478, 482.

(2) This decision has been said to rest on an old statute since repealed, and it has been held to be the rule that the donee's execution of general power of testamentary appointment does not justify court in seizing property and subjecting it to payment of debts of donee if estate is insufficient to satisfy debts.—St.

to exist in that, as a matter of public policy, the settlor of a trust inter vivos may not deprive his creditors of their right to enforce payment of their debts out of the trust property where he has reserved to himself the income for life and a general power of appointment.<sup>67</sup> In other jurisdictions, however, it is the settled rule that, where a general power of appointment is exercised in favor of a volunteer, the subject matter of the power will be treated in equity as assets for the payment of the debts of the donee of the power, to the exclusion of the appointee,<sup>68</sup> or taker in default after a defective appointment;<sup>69</sup> but creditors can lay claim to the appointed estate only to the extent that the donee's own estate is insufficient to satisfy their demands.<sup>70</sup> The rule permitting the donee's creditors to enforce their claims against the property appointed to a volunteer does not apply where the power is limited and not general,<sup>71</sup> or in favor of creditors who were such before the creation of the power,<sup>72</sup> or against a bona fide purchaser for value.<sup>73</sup>

The donee of a general, unrestricted power of appointment may subject the estate appointed to the payment of his debts by specifically providing in the appointing provisions for the payment of such debts,<sup>74</sup> or by otherwise manifesting an intention

A provision in a separation agreement obligating a husband to pay his wife a specific monthly sum, to the effect that the husband will do nothing which will operate to prevent or delay the payments to the wife provided for in the agreement, subordinates the husband's right to alienate his property by exercise of power of appointment to the wife's remedy to collect therefrom the monthly payments, and prevents him from placing the res of a trust inter vivos beyond her reach by exercise of a reserved power of appointment.—In re Welsh's Estate, 61 Pa.Dist. & Co. 47.

Basis of rule

(1) "The underlying thought seems to be that as it is true that when a man dies the law in dealing with his own property puts the right of his creditors ahead of the rights of his devisees or heirs at law, so where he has a general power of appointment over property other than his own, equity prefers the rights of his own creditors as against those of his appointees if the latter are not creditors. The principle is that, having power to appoint the property to anybody he sees fit, it is his duty to appoint to creditors rather than volunteers."—Jackson v. Franklin, 177 S.E. 731, 735, 179 Ga. 840, 97 A.L.R. 1064.

(2) Other statements of basis of rule see 49 C.J. p 1277 note 24 [a].

Personal property

A general power of appointment may be considered as personal property as to creditor's rights.—In re Winter's Estate, 47 A.2d 548, 24 N.J. Misc. 172.

Expenses of administration

Where testatrix' power of appointment was exercised through residuary clause in will, expenses of administration of testatrix' estate were payable out of individual estate, and any expenses arising out of administration of property subject to power were payable from that property.—Slayton v. Fitch Home, supra.

Claims or expenses of administration

Property covered by special power of appointment cannot be subjected to payment of deceased donee's creditors' claims or expenses of administration of donee's estate, except as required by rules relating to fraudulent conveyances.—Prescott v. Wordell, supra.

Power to appoint by will

Generally, the equity of a donee's creditors rests on the donee's power to appoint in his own favor, and, where a power to appoint by will is not considered to be general so as to permit appointment to the donee's estate or to his creditors, the creditors have no claim in case of appointment to others.—Hooker v. #### Discharge of obligation

Donee, in providing for payment of debts out of appointed property, was only discharging obligation equity would have enforced.—McMurtry v. State, 151 A. 252, 111 Conn. 594.

Power held exercised

(1) Beneficiary of trust, who was also donee of power to appoint trust property, was held to have exercised power of appointment in favor of his creditors where his will provided for distribution of trust property and authorized executor to pay his debts out of first money coming into executor's hands.—Mayberry v. Redmond, 83 S.W.2d 897, 169 Tenn. 190.

(2) Where a deed of trust directed the income of the property to be paid to a daughter for life, and that on her decease the principal be con-

to blend his own and the appointed estate for purposes of payment of debts;<sup>75</sup> but it has been held that the donee's personal estate is required to be exhausted first in the payment of his debts before seeking contribution out of the appointed property for payment of the remainder.<sup>76</sup> In determining whether a testator who exercised a power of appointment intended to blend his own separate estate with the appointive estate, for the payment of his debts, his intention in exercising his power of appointment is to be gathered from his will, and his intention as it there appears must prevail.<sup>77</sup> A direction in the will that the testator's debts be paid out of his estate, without mention of the estate over which the testator had a power of appointment, is required to be construed to refer only to his individual estate and not the appointive estate, in the absence of a manifested intention to the contrary;<sup>78</sup> and the fact that the testator disposed of his own separate estate and the estate over which he had the power of appointment in the same manner and on the same trusts does not indicate an intention to blend the estates for all purposes so as to subject the appointive estate to the payment of the testator's individual debts.<sup>79</sup>

VI. EXECUTION

§ 33. Duty to Execute

A power may be coupled with a mandatory duty to exercise it, but ordinarily the donee of a power may or may not exercise it as he sees fit.

A power may be coupled with a mandatory duty to exercise it,<sup>80</sup> as in the case of a power in trust, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Trusts § 247, also 65 C.J. p 652 notes 52-54, or where the duty is imposed by the instrument conferring the power,<sup>81</sup> and in such case the donee of the power is under a duty to exercise it, even though he is given discretion as to the manner of its exercise.<sup>82</sup> Ordinarily,

however, as discussed supra § 1, a power is not imperative and the donee may or may not exercise it as he sees fit.<sup>83</sup>

§ 34. Compelling or Restraining Execution

As a rule the courts will not interfere to compel or restrain the exercise of a discretionary or nonimperative power.

As a rule the courts will not interfere to compel or control the execution of a discretionary or nonimperative power,<sup>84</sup> except as they may compel specific veyed to such persons and estates as she should by will appoint, her will, directing payment of her debts and giving residue to her husband absolutely, and on his death to any children or issue of children, operated to appoint the trust property to pay her debts, as she might do under the general power.—In re Pennsylvania Co. for Insurances on Lives and Granting Annuities, 107 A. 840, 264 Pa. 433.

75. Pa.—In re Scott's Estate, 44 A. 2d 323, 158 Pa.Super. 138, affirmed 46 A.2d 174, 353 Pa. 575.

77. Pa.—In re Stannert's Estate, 15 A.2d 360, 339 Pa. 439.

Extrinsic evidence

Where manifest intention of testator not to blend estate over which he had power of appointment with his own separate estate, and hence not to subject appointive estate to payment of his individual debts, was clear from language of will itself, extrinsic evidence of intention was properly excluded by trial court.—In re Stannert's Estate, supra.

78. Pa.—In re Stannert's Estate, 15 A.2d 360, 339 Pa. 439.

Realty not subject to payment of debts

Where children, in order to provide for support of their mother, appointed themselves trustees of certain realty, title of which they retained, and they appointed their mother as their agent to control and manage the realty, and gave her power to convey realty to such person or persons as she should by her last will direct, but not otherwise, and they provided that the realty should not be subjected to payment of debts of mother, provision in will of mother directing payment of all just debts except those that were secured by liens on realty was not an exercise of the power of appointment in favor of the mother's creditors, since the only relief mother was warranted in extending to her creditors was by making a specific bequest to creditors.—Johnson v. Shriver, Colo., 216 P.2d 653.

Disposition on failure to exercise

(1) Where grantor provides for disposition of property on failure of donee of a power of appointment to exercise it, the power is ordinarily regarded as a "discretionary power" and not "an imperative power."—Application of Schluskel, 89 N.Y.S. 2d 47, 195 Misc. 1008.

(2) Disposition on failure to exercise power generally see infra § 55.

84. U.S.—Mississippi Valley Trust Co. v. Commissioner of Internal performance of a contract to execute the power.<sup>85</sup> However, where the instrument creating the power makes its execution an imperative duty, its execution may be compelled by the court.<sup>86</sup>

Restraining execution. The courts will not ordinarily interpose to restrain the execution of a power,<sup>87</sup> except where abuse of discretion, bad faith, or fraud is shown,<sup>88</sup> or where the power is attempted to be exercised in a manner different from that authorized by the donor.<sup>89</sup> Where the validity of a power is in question, its exercise may be restrained pending the determination of the controversy.<sup>90</sup>

§ 35. By Whom Power May Be Executed

A power may be exercised only by the person or persons authorized by the instrument creating the power.

A power may be exercised only by the person or persons authorized by the instrument creating the power.<sup>91</sup>

Infants. A collateral power or a power in gross may be exercised by an infant, whether the subject matter of the power is realty or personalty;<sup>92</sup> but an infant may not execute a power appendant or appurtenant,<sup>93</sup> unless, it has been indicated, the instrument giving such power shows the donor's intention that it should be exercised during the donee's infancy.<sup>94</sup>

Insane persons. An insane person may not exercise a power.<sup>95</sup> As considered supra § 15, where a power coupled with an interest or a mere naked power devolves on an insane person, it is suspended during the continuance of the disability, and it has been held that the power may not be exercised by the committee of the insane person,<sup>96</sup> but it has also been held that a court may authorize the guardian of an insane person to exercise a power of sale which is for the lunatic's benefit.<sup>97</sup>

the consent or concurrence of her husband, execute a power, whether appendant, in gross, or simply collateral, by will, deed, or otherwise, even in favor of her husband, and even though she may be under disability to dispose of her own estate, regardless of whether the power was granted or reserved before or after her marriage,<sup>98</sup> unless the concurrence of the husband is required by the instrument conferring the power,<sup>99</sup> or the terms of the instrument are inconsistent with the exercise of the power during coverture.<sup>1</sup>

Personal, official, or fiduciary character of donee. When a power is conferred on a person or persons by name, it is ordinarily personal, and may be exercised only by the donees named;<sup>2</sup> but when it is given to a class or to a designated person or persons merely virtute officii, it is not personal, and may be exercised by the person or persons for the time being members of the class or holding the office.<sup>3</sup>

Joint or several authority. As a general rule, where a power is conferred on two or more persons, and it is dependent on their judgment whether or not it shall be exercised, the power is a special confidence in their combined judgments, and the concurrence of both or all is necessary to a valid exercise of the power,<sup>4</sup> at least as far as acts involving discretion are concerned.<sup>5</sup> A power may, however, be executed by one donee with the assent of the other or others where such others do not merely delegate the power to him;<sup>6</sup> and, where a power to sell is given to two or more persons, a sale by one, subsequently ratified by the other or others, is valid.<sup>7</sup> The general rule requiring concurrence of all does not apply where the power is in terms given to the donees jointly or severally,<sup>8</sup> or where a majority of the donees are expressly authorized to act;<sup>9</sup> but, where there are only two donees, one may not exercise the power under the latter provision,<sup>10</sup> Where there is a grant of a power in trust to two, and it is impossible for one of them to qualify, it has been held that the other may exercise the power.<sup>11</sup>

Except when otherwise provided by statute,<sup>12</sup> a mere naked or collateral power given to two or more persons in their personal capacity, as distinguished from a power given them virtute officii, is determined by the death of any one, and does not survive to the other or others,<sup>13</sup> but a power coupled with an interest may be executed by the survivor or survivors,<sup>14</sup> even though the power is discretionary,<sup>15</sup> unless a contrary intention appears from the instrument creating the power.<sup>16</sup> Where a power is given to persons virtute officii, and not as individuals, it may, on the death of one or some of them, be exercised by the survivor or survivors.<sup>17</sup>

Effect of renunciation or resignation of, or discharge from, office or trust. The donee of a power who is also appointed executor or trustee by the instrument creating the power is not deprived of his right to exercise it by renouncing, resigning, or being discharged from his office or trust,<sup>18</sup> unless the power was given him simply virtute officii.<sup>19</sup>

Heirs or representatives of deceased donee. A power ordinarily may not be exercised by the heirs of the donee after his death;<sup>20</sup> nor may it be exercised by his executor or administrator,<sup>21</sup> unless it is coupled with an interest or trust,<sup>22</sup> or is expressly conferred on the donee and his executors or administrators<sup>23</sup> or legal representatives.<sup>24</sup>

§ 36. — Delegation or Assignment of Powers

The donee of a power which involves discretion ordinarily may not assign it or delegate its exercise to another unless he is authorized to do so.

A power the execution of which does not require the exercise of judgment or discretion may be delegated by the donee;<sup>25</sup> but the donee of a power which involves discretion ordinarily may not assign it or delegate its exercise to another,<sup>26</sup>

whether or not it is founded on the donor's personal confidence in the donee,<sup>27</sup> unless he is authorized so to do either expressly or by necessary implication,<sup>28</sup> except in some particular act merely ministerial and not requiring the exercise of judgment.<sup>29</sup> Similarly, where the consent of a third person is made a condition precedent to the execution of a power, such person may not authorize another as his attorney to consent.<sup>30</sup> It would seem, however, that a power which is absolute and does not involve any act personal to the donee may be delegated by him.<sup>31</sup>

Although the general statement has been made that the donee of a power of appointment is not entitled to delegate the exercise of the power unless there is something in the gift of the power to justify the delegation,<sup>32</sup> there is substantial authority that a power of appointment may be exercised by creating a new and further power of appointment.<sup>33</sup> Thus, it has been held that a special power of appointment may be effectively exercised by creating a general power in an object of the special power,<sup>34</sup> or by appointing an interest for life in an object of the power and a special power to appoint among persons, all of whom are objects of the original power,<sup>35</sup> but, if the power expressly or by clear implication requires that an estate in fee and no other be appointed, it may not be exercised by creating a further power of appointment.<sup>36</sup> Moreover, it has been held that the exercise of a power of appointment by creating a further power of appointment is proper only where the donee may appoint to himself,<sup>37</sup> or where the appointment is limited to a class,<sup>38</sup> and that, where a general power of appointment may be exercised only by will and not by deed, it may not be exercised by creating a new and further power of appointment.<sup>39</sup>

Ratification. The donee of a discretionary power of sale may ratify a sale made by his attorney in fact and thereby validate it.<sup>40</sup>

Effect of attempted delegation. Where there is an attempt to delegate a power which may not be transferred, the delegation is void;<sup>41</sup> but an unauthorized delegation of power does not invalidate appointments or other dispositions which the donee had authority to make.<sup>42</sup>

§ 37. Time of Execution

As a general rule a power may be exercised at any time during the life of the donee or person authorized to execute it provided the purpose or object of the power continues that long, unless the instrument of creation provides for an earlier exercise of the power.

As a general rule a power may be exercised at any time during the life of the donee or other person authorized to execute it,<sup>43</sup> provided the purpose or object of the power continues that long,<sup>44</sup> unless the instrument of creation provides either expressly or by implication for an earlier exercise or for a lesser period,<sup>45</sup> or the term is restricted by statute.<sup>46</sup> It has been held that a power should be exercised within a reasonable time,<sup>47</sup> and, if it remains unexercised for an unreasonable time, the power may terminate.<sup>48</sup> A power exercised by will is not exercised until the donee's death.<sup>49</sup>

Execution at or within specified time. A provision for the execution of a power at a specified future time or within a specified period has been construed as merely directory,<sup>50</sup> unless it appears that the donor intended that it should be of the essence of the power.<sup>51</sup> A power to be exercised "immediately" should be executed within a reasonable time, or as soon as practicable.<sup>52</sup>

Will executed prior to creation of power. There is authority that a will executed prior to the creation of a power may not be held an execution thereof,<sup>53</sup> but this rule is apparently a consequence of the early common-law rule that a will does not dispose of real property acquired after its execution,<sup>54</sup> and, under modern rules and statutes, under which a will disposes of property acquired after its execution, it is generally held that a power may be validly exercised by a will executed prior to the creation of the power, if the will is an otherwise effective exercise of the power,<sup>55</sup> as where it mani-

feats an intention to execute the power.<sup>56</sup> Where a will is executed so nearly contemporaneously with the creation of a power as to be a part of the same transaction, it has been held an effectual exercise of the power, although in fact made prior to the power's creation.<sup>57</sup> A will executed prior to the creation of a power may be given effect as an execution of the power by a codicil executed after the power was created, ratifying and republishing the will.<sup>58</sup>

Discretion of donee. Where the execution of a power is left to the discretion of the donee, it may be exercised by him at such time as he sees fit,<sup>59</sup> even though the donor suggests a time for its exercise,<sup>60</sup> provided execution takes place within a reasonable time,<sup>61</sup> and the donee acts in good faith.<sup>62</sup>

Execution dependent on contingency. Where a power is authorized to be executed on a contingent event, it may, unless contrary to the intention of the donor, be executed before the event, although the execution will take effect only on the happening of the contingency,<sup>63</sup> especially where the happening of the event cannot be ascertained until the moment of the donee's death.<sup>64</sup>

Exercise by survivor. Where, a power given to the survivor of two is special,<sup>70</sup> or where it is limited to be executed after the death of one,<sup>71</sup> it may not be well exercised by a deed or will made during the lives of both by that individual who afterward proves to be the survivor.

certain mode of executing it is prescribed by the donor, the donee has no authority to execute it in any other mode.<sup>73</sup> Strict compliance with the terms of the grant is generally required,<sup>74</sup> but it has been held that, where a power is coupled with an interest, the law is satisfied with a substantial compliance with the terms of the instrument by which it was created;<sup>75</sup> nor is the same strictness applied to the execution of a power coupled with a trust as to that of a naked power.<sup>76</sup>

The grant of a power without specific directions as to the mode of its exercise necessarily includes a grant of power to exercise the power,<sup>77</sup> and, where no mode is prescribed, or where the manner of execution is left to the discretion of the donee, he may execute it in any manner which will legally effectuate the intention of the donor.<sup>78</sup>

should be exercised by the donee in his own name,<sup>79</sup> unless the terms of its creation merely authorize him to execute it as the donor's agent or attorney.<sup>80</sup> A power may be executed only in the capacity in which it was conferred on the donee.<sup>81</sup>

Parol sale. A power to sell, without particular directions for its execution, may be executed by a parol sale,<sup>82</sup> unless such sale would be in contravention of the statute of frauds.<sup>83</sup>

§ 39. Instrument of Execution

Where the terms of the creation of a power require it to be executed by a particular instrument, the restriction must be observed, and the power cannot be effectually executed in any other way or by any other instrument.

Where the execution of a power is not otherwise restricted by the terms of its creation, it may be exercised by deed,<sup>84</sup> and, if not otherwise restricted,

Injury from irregular exercise of power

Grantor of power is not precluded from complaining of its irregular exercise because financial injury is not shown.—Illinois Refining Co. v. Welch, 173 N.E. 345, 341 Ill. 292.

General residuary clause

(1) The court must ascertain and render effective the intent and purpose sought to be accomplished by testator when he included in his will a provision that a general residuary clause in will of donee of power should not be deemed an exercise of power of appointment granted by testator; the intention of the testator in so providing was to provide against a thoughtless or inadequately considered final disposition of the portion of his estate to which the power of appointment applied.—In re Kilpatrick's Estate, 28 N.W.2d 286, 318 Mich. 445.

(2) Where donee of power executed will providing that remainder of trust property was devised and bequeathed in equal shares to such beneficiaries as survived donee, disposition of trust property was not made by a general residuary clause of will in violation of the power; where donee of power of appointment expressly stated that will constituted the exercise of such power and after specific bequests of parts of property subject to such power gave the residue of it to designated beneficiaries and also disposed of own property, donee complied with power providing that a general residuary clause should not be deemed an exercise thereof.—In re Kilpatrick's Estate, 28 N.W.2d 286, 318 Mich. 445.

Directions to trustee

Where donee was authorized only to give direction to trustees who were required to convey the property as directed, a deed executed by donee purporting to convey the property directly to a grantee without any action or conveyance by trustees was not a valid exercise of the power and conveyed nothing in virtue thereof.—*Metropolitan Life Ins. 49 C.J. p 1287 note 66.

Power to be exercised during donee's lifetime

(1) A power to dispose of property during one's lifetime has been held not a power to leave by will, since wills are ambulatory instruments and do not take effect until death of testator.—Belford v. Olson, supra—49 C.J. p 1287 note 66 [a].

(2) Accordingly, a power to sell and convey while living was held not to carry power to dispose of by will.—Gentle v. Frederick, 174 So. 606, 234 Ala. 184.

(3) On the other hand, it has been held that a power to be exercised during donee's lifetime may be as validly exercised by will as by deed.—McGee v. Vandeventer, 158 N.E. 127, 326 Ill. 425.

(4) A power of disposition to be exercised by the donee at any time before his death could be exercised by the donee by his will.—Kiplinger v. Armstrong, 171 N.E. 245, 34 Ohio App. 348.

(5) Where property was conveyed by grantor to his attorney who immediately reconveyed property to grantor for life with power to grant, sell, lease, mortgage or "in any other manner" dispose of absolute estate therein with provision that in event power was not exercised property was to go to his niece, the quoted words did not authorize grantor to alter direction in which remainder of property should go, by giving it by his will to another.—Hutchinson v. Farmer, 58 A.2d 638, 190 Md. 411.

Power to be exercised at donee's death

The fact that by the terms of its creation a power is to be exercised at the donee's death does not restrict it to execution by will alone, and it may be exercised by deed.—Goodloe v. Woods, 80 S.E. 108, 115 Va. 540—49 C.J. p 1285 note 57 [a].

Contract as fettering power

The donee of a power to make appointment by will has no right to enter into any contract that fetters such power; whether a particular contract executed by donee of a power fetters such power so as to be unenforceable in equity must be determined from the language of instru-

make an appointment is not performed, the promisee may not obtain damages<sup>99</sup> or the specific property.<sup>1</sup>

Formal requisites. A deed, will, or other instrument in execution of a power must be executed with the formalities required by law in the execution of such instruments generally,<sup>2</sup> but as a rule, where a power may be executed by either of two instruments, formalities prescribed for one are not required for the other.<sup>3</sup> All formalities prescribed by the instrument creating the power must be observed,<sup>4</sup> such as a requirement that the instrument of execution be under seal,<sup>5</sup> be duly acknowledged,<sup>6</sup> or that it be witnessed or attested by a certain number of witnesses, or in a certain manner.<sup>7</sup> Where the instrument granting the power so provides, the instrument executing the power must be deposited with the trustees of the property.<sup>8</sup>

By whom instrument executed. The instrument by which a power is exercised must be executed by, or in behalf of, the donee or holder of the power.<sup>9</sup> The spouse of the donee need not join in the instrument,<sup>10</sup> unless his joinder is required by the instrument creating the power;<sup>11</sup> and, when the donee is a life tenant of the subject matter of the power, the remaindermen need not join.<sup>12</sup>

Construction. A writing allegedly exercising a power is to be read into and construed with the grant of the power.<sup>13</sup> The exercise of a power is to be construed in accordance with the donee's intention,<sup>14</sup> and in the light of the circumstances exist-ment creating the power and intention of the donor as gathered from such instrument.—O'Hara v. O'Hara, 44 A.2d 813, 185 Md. 321, 163 A.L.R. 1444.

during the coverture, by any writing or writings under her hand and seal attested by three credible witnesses, and she executed a deed which recited that the parties had thereunto set their hands and seals, and which the witnesses attested as having been "sealed and delivered," this was held a sufficient execution of the power, although the witnesses did not attest the fact of her "signing" it.

Mistake of law

Where, under foreign law, life beneficiary's two sons were his "forced heirs," and as such entitled to two thirds of his estate, and life beneficiary, in exercising his power of appointment under a trust, under mistaken belief that foreign law applied, directed that the "freely disposable share" of his estate be given to a designated donee, other than the sons, exercise of power of appointment was a disposal of only one third of the trust fund.—In re O'Connor, 82 N.Y.S.2d 310.

"Trust"

Where will drafted and executed in foreign country provided for disposition of trust fund over which testatrix had power of appointment by will as part of residuary trust, incorporation in residuary clause of statutory will form providing that

ing at the time the power is exercised.<sup>15</sup> Where a power is exercised, it has been held that the intention of the donee is to be ascertained in precisely the same manner as a testator's intent is discovered in a will,<sup>16</sup> and that an appointment by will is to be construed as are other testamentary provisions.<sup>17</sup> It has been held that the law leans against a construction which would render ineffectual an attempted execution of a power.<sup>18</sup>

Whether or not an instrument, suitable to the execution of a power, operates as an exercise thereof depends on the intention of the donee of the power; except where supplied by statute, an intention to execute the power must appear, and, where such intention properly appears, the power is effectually exercised.

The question whether or not an instrument, suitable to the execution of a power, operates as an exercise thereof depends on the intention of the donee of the power.<sup>19</sup> Except when supplied by statute, the intention to execute a power must always appear in its execution, either by express terms or recitals, or by necessary implication;<sup>20</sup> but, where such intention does appear, either expressly or by implication, and however it is manifested, in an instrument suitable to the execution of the power, the power is effectually exercised.<sup>21</sup>

It has been held that an intention to exercise the power must clearly appear<sup>22</sup> so that the transaction is not fairly susceptible of any other construction;<sup>23</sup> and that, where it is uncertain whether or not an act done by the donee of a power is intended to be in execution thereof,<sup>24</sup> or where an intention not to exercise it is shown,<sup>25</sup> the power will not be treated as executed.

The donee's intention to exercise a power, however, need not be manifested in any given way.<sup>26</sup> Technical language is not necessary to the exercise of a power;<sup>27</sup> nor is it necessary that the intention to execute the power appear by express terms or recitals.<sup>28</sup> Such intention may be sufficiently manifested by words, acts, or deeds demonstrating the intention,<sup>29</sup> and an intention to exercise a power by an instrument may be sufficiently manifested by the circumstances surrounding the transaction.<sup>30</sup>

In determining whether or not the donee intended by his will to exercise the power, the entire will in all its parts may be looked to.<sup>31</sup> It has been held that the intent must, if possible, be ascertained from the terms of the will itself,<sup>32</sup> and if, considering the terms of the will, a doubt exists, resort may be had to recognized rules of construction.<sup>33</sup> In determining whether or not a power is exercised by the donee's will, the will is to be considered in the light of the circumstances<sup>34</sup> at the time of the execution of the will<sup>35</sup> and at the time of the donee's death.<sup>36</sup>

Question of law or fact. Where the determination of the issue depends solely on the terms of a written instrument, whether or not there was an intention to exercise a power is a question of law.<sup>37</sup>

Power exercised by whole will or by particular clause. Where a power is exercised by will, whether it is exercised by the will as a whole or by a particular clause or the residuary clause depends on the testator's intention.<sup>38</sup> A power has been held to be exercised by the will as a whole and not by any particular clause thereof where the will contains an introductory declaration that the testator intends by the will to dispose of all property over which he has a power of appointment.<sup>39</sup> Where a will is regarded as an exercise of a power held by the testator, because it would otherwise be nugatory, the power must be treated as exercised by the whole will, and not merely by the residuary clause.<sup>40</sup> which he owned and other circumstances existing at the time of the execution of the will, indicate that the donee of a power understood that he was disposing of the property covered by the power, the power will be considered exercised.

Where pecuniary gifts, a residuary gift, or both, in the donee's will, read with reference to the property which he owned and other circumstances existing at the time of the execution of the will, indicate that the donee understood that he was disposing of the property covered by the power, the power will be considered exercised.<sup>41</sup> A will bequeathing exactly the sum the testator had a right to dispose of under a power is ordinarily treated as an execution of the power, although no reference to it is made in the will.<sup>42</sup> The purpose of a conveyance is strong evidence of intention to execute a power when such execution is necessary to effect the purpose.<sup>43</sup> A mere direction by a testator for the payment of his debts is not an exercise of his power of appointment.<sup>44</sup> The fact that the testator made what he believed to be an effective disposition of the property during his life indicates that he did not intend to exercise the power by his will.<sup>45</sup> It has been held that, where the donee believes that he owns the appointive property, a will disposing of the property as his own does not operate as an exercise of his power to appoint it,<sup>46</sup> but it has also been held that a donee's intent to execute a power, otherwise disclosed, is not negated by the mere fact that he refers to the subject of the power as his own individual property.<sup>47</sup>

(2) Reference to Power

As a general rule, an intention to exercise a power is sufficiently demonstrated by an express reference to the power, but such reference is not necessary where an intention to exercise the power is otherwise manifested.

An intention to exercise a power is sufficiently manifested by an express exercise of the power,<sup>48</sup> and it is generally held that an intention to execute a power is sufficiently demonstrated by an express reference to the power.<sup>49</sup> Where the donee of a power professes in general terms to act in pursuance of all or every power enabling him to dispose of property, this is ordinarily a sufficient reference to a particular power to operate as an execution thereof, unless a contrary intention appears.<sup>50</sup> While the instrument executing a power should ordinarily

Full exercise of power

Where will disposes of property of which testatrix is given power of appointment, will is construed to be

Devise of fee; express exercise of powers

Where testatrix had been given power of appointment over one half of a trust and, in belief that she had a fee therein, attempted to devise the fee to her trustees and in later portion of her will by specific reference to power of appointment exercised it, the latter provision was a valid exercise of the power and the former was without effect.—Bancroft v. Bancroft, 27 A.2d 836, 68 R.I. 406.

Special powers

(1) The text rule applies as to a special power.—In re Lewis' Estate, supra.

(2) Where donee made no specific mention in his will of any special power of appointment, but will contained residuary clause devising and bequeathing donee's own property and that over which he had a power of appointment, there was a valid exercise of the special power of appointment in view of fact that the only property subject to a power to which the residuary clause could relate was the special power.—Pitman v. Pitman, 50 N.E.2d 69, 314 Mass. 465, 150 A.L.R. 509.

(3) "Special powers" defined see supra § 6.

refer to it,<sup>51</sup> such reference is unnecessary if it clearly appears that the donee had in view the subject of the power at the time and intended to execute it.<sup>52</sup>

(3) Reference to Subject Matter or Instrument Creating Power

An intention to execute a power may be sufficiently shown by a reference to the subject matter of the power or to the instrument by which it was created.

An intention to execute a power may be sufficiently shown by a reference in the instrument of execution to the subject matter of the power, or to the instrument by which it was created, without any direct reference to the power itself.<sup>53</sup>

(4) Instrument Inoperative Except as Execution of Power

Where a deed or will cannot operate except as an execution of a power, it will be presumed to be so intended, although the power is not referred to.

Where a deed or will cannot operate except as an execution of a power, it will be presumed to be so intended, although the power is not referred to;<sup>54</sup> but, if there is any other way in which the instrument can have effect, it will be deemed to operate in that way, and not as an execution of the power, in the absence of any apparent intention to execute the power.<sup>55</sup> Where the donee of a power owned no property at the time of the execution of his will

Registration of deed

Where owners of realty conveyed realty to realty company as trustee, with power in company's own name to dispose of all or part of the realty and to execute and deliver a good and sufficient deed, and company executed a deed, which was filed for record, to purchasers without any mention that company was trustee, deed would be deemed to have been made in execution of the power and was good, not only between the parties, but also as against purchasers for value to whom the company subsequently conveyed by registered deed the same realty by deed in which company was named as trustee, as against objection that because of the mode of its execution, original deed was not capable of being registered so that index might show that it was executed as the act of a trustee.—Tocci v. Nowfall, 18 S.E.2d 225, 320 N.C. 550.

or at the time of his death, his will has been deemed to be an exercise of the power,<sup>56</sup> and a general devise has been held a sufficient exercise of a power of appointment over real estate where the donee owned no real property.<sup>57</sup> In this connection, a distinction has been made between realty and personalty, so that a devise in general terms is an exercise of the testator's power over real estate where the testator owned no realty at the time of the execution of the will,<sup>58</sup> but a bequest in general terms is not an execution of his power over personal property, even though the testator owned no personal property at the time of the execution of the will;<sup>59</sup> but it has also been held that this distinction has been invalidated by the enactment of statutes abrogating the common-law rule that a will does not transmit after-acquired realty,<sup>60</sup> and that the fact that the testator was without real or personal property at the time of the execution of the will does not make a general devise or bequest in such will operate as an exercise of his power,<sup>61</sup> although it may be some evidence that such was the testator's intention.<sup>62</sup> The fact that his will makes dispositions substantially in excess of his own property indicates that the testator intended to exercise the power,<sup>63</sup> but such fact is not conclusive,<sup>64</sup> and it has been held that the execution of a power may not be presumed from the fact that the bequests in a will exceed the testator's estate where his estate is substantial.<sup>65</sup> An intent to exercise the power has been held to be sufficiently evidenced by a will making dispositions approximately equal to the value of the appointive estate where the testator at the time of the execution of the will had virtually no assets,<sup>66</sup> even though, thereafter and before his death, he acquired substantial property.<sup>67</sup>

(5) Grant or Conveyance by Donee Having Estate or Interest

Where the donee of a power has also an estate or interest in the subject matter of the power, a deed or other instrument executed by him will pass only his own interest or estate and will not be treated as an execution of the power unless an intention to execute the power appears.

Where the donee of a power has also an estate or interest in the subject matter of the power, it is the general rule that a deed, will, or other instrument executed by him will pass only his own interest or estate, and will not be treated as an execution of the power, in the absence of any reference to the power or other evidence of intention to execute it;<sup>68</sup> but it is otherwise where an

Reason for rule

(1) Under the English common law at the time this rule was adopted, a will was ineffective to transmit after-acquired real property, so that, if the testator had no realty other than that which was subject to the power, the conclusion was that he intended to exercise the power by a general devise since there was nothing else to which the words could refer.

Equivocal acts

Where one has estate in, and power over, property, his equivocal acts will be presumed to be made as owner.—Rice v. Park, 135 So. 472, 223 Ala. 317.

Quitclaim deed

Ordinary quitclaim deed contains no apt words indicating intent to exercise power, but language thereof naturally and properly relates only to grantor's interest in land conveyed, and, where he actually owns interest on which deed can take effect, it will be held a conveyance only of such interest, not a conveyance in execution of power.—

intention to execute the power appears,<sup>69</sup> as where his acts must be referred to the power to give them full effect.<sup>70</sup> Thus, where one having power to appoint or convey the fee-simple estate, and also having a life estate or other interest, executes a conveyance of the fee, the conveyance will be regarded as an execution of the power.<sup>71</sup> Where the instrument purports merely to pass the grantor's own estate or interest, it will be so construed, and will not constitute an exercise of the power;<sup>72</sup> and, on the other hand, a disposition of the subject matter of a power by the donee in express execution of the power will be restricted, in the absence of anything in the context showing a contrary intention, to an execution of the power so as not to affect the donee's individual estate.<sup>73</sup> A bequest by the life tenant of a trust, with power to appoint the remainder, of all his interest in the trust has been held to be an exercise of the power where the accrued and unpaid income at the time of death was

c. Will Disposing of All Donee's Property; General Bequest or Devise

- (1) Common-law rule
- (2) Judicial and statutory modification of rule

(1) Common-law Rule

The common-law rule is that the will of a donee of a power disposing of all of his property or making general devises or bequests is not an exercise of his power unless an intention to exercise the power is manifested.

The common-law rule is that the mere fact that the donee of a power to appoint or dispose of property leaves a will disposing of all of his property or containing a general devise or bequest does not sufficiently evidence an intent to exercise the power and such will does not operate as an exercise of the power,<sup>75</sup> unless, in accordance with the rules here-

In New Hampshire

(1) In an early case, the court, after expressing its dissatisfaction with the text rule, reluctantly concluded that it was too well estofore discussed in subdivisions a and b of this section, an intention to exercise the power is otherwise manifested.<sup>76</sup>

(2) Judicial and Statutory Modification of Rule

- (a) In general
- (b) Intention not to exercise power

(a) In General

In some jurisdictions, the rule has been established by judicial decision or by statute that, where the will of a donee of a power disposes of all of his property or estate or contains a general devise or bequest, such will operates as an exercise of the donee's power of appointment or disposition unless an intention to the contrary appears.

In at least one jurisdiction, the common-law rule has been repudiated, and it is held that where the will of the donee of a power disposes of all of his property or estate or contains a general devise or bequest, such will operates as an exercise of the donee's power of appointment or disposition, even though the power is not mentioned in the will,<sup>77</sup> unless an intention to the contrary appears;<sup>78</sup> and this rule has been incorporated into a number of statutes.<sup>79</sup> established to be disregarded.—Burleigh v. Clough, 52 N.E. 267, 13 Am. R. 23.

(2) It was subsequently held that a will making a gift of the residue of "my estate" was an exercise of a power of disposition, it being held that it was more probable than otherwise that the testator intended by such phrase to exercise the power.—Kimball v. New Hampshire Bible Society, 23 A. 83, 65 N.H. 139.

(3) In a later decision, it was held that the common-law rule is no longer in force in the state and that the will of a donee of a power disposing of all of his estate would constitute an exercise of the power in the absence of a contrary intention.—Emery v. Haven, 85 A. 940, 67 N.H. 503.

(4) However, in its latest expression, the court has criticized Emery v. Haven, supra, and reaffirmed the common-law rule stated in the text.—Faulkner v. Faulkner, 44 A.2d 429, 93 N.H. 451.

Knowledge of power

Knowledge of the existence of the power of appointment is imputed to donee under statute, and it is immaterial that donee's will is silent in respect of the exercise of the power.—In re Grinnell's Estate, 49 N.Y.S.2d 781, 183 Misc. 109.

Construction of English statute

Since the statute is a literal copy of the English Wills Act, which had received a definite construction before its adoption by the statute, the statute should be construed consistently with that construction.—Adams v. Rule not restricted to general powers. The rule that the will of a donee disposing of all of his property or making general devises or bequests is an exercise of his powers, even though they are not mentioned, has been held to apply to special and limited powers as well as to general powers.<sup>91</sup>

Rule restricted to wills. The rule that an instrument disposing of all of the donee's property is an exercise of his powers, even though they are not mentioned, applies only to wills and does not apply to deeds.<sup>92</sup>

Will executed before grant of power. The rule that a will disposing of all the donee's property or making general devises or bequests is an exercise

Power exercised by will as whole or by particular clause. Under the rule that a will of the donee of a power disposing of all of his property operates as an exercise of his power, unless an intent to the contrary is manifested, the intent of the donee governs as to whether the power is exercised by the will as a whole, by a particular clause thereof, or by the residuary clause of the will.<sup>95</sup> Ordinarily, where the will is silent as to the power, the appointive property is exercised by, and passes under, the residuary clause of the will,<sup>96</sup> but the power may be held to be exercised by and to pass by the entire

will and not merely by the residuary clause;<sup>97</sup> and it has been held that when a power is deemed exercised through the application of the statute, the testator must be taken as exercising his power to the extent to which the fund subject to it is required to make all of the lawful provisions of the will effective.<sup>98</sup> A statute providing that a devise or bequest purporting to be of all the property belonging to the testator includes property over which he has a power of appointment, unless an intention to the contrary appears, is not limited to wills where a particular devise or bequest purports to be of all the property but also applies to a will which disposes of all the testator's property as the combined result of distinct provisions.<sup>99</sup>

(b) Intention Not to Exercise Power

The statute does not change the rule that the execution of a power depends on the intention of the donee of the power and, if the will shows an intention not to exercise the power, such intention controls.

The statute does not change the rule that the execution of a power depends on the intention of the donee,<sup>1</sup> and, if the will shows an intention not to exercise the power, such intention controls.<sup>2</sup> It has been held that, where the donee's will disposes of all his property or contains a general devise or bequest, an intention that it shall not operate as an exercise of the donee's power must be disclosed by the will itself<sup>3</sup> expressly, or by necessary implication,<sup>4</sup> by language indicating such intention, or by

Individual property sufficient to pay legacies

Where individual property of testatrix was sufficient to fulfill legacies at time will was executed, intent of testatrix who had power of appointment was assumed to be that the power of appointment should be exercised by the residuary clause only.—*Slayton v. #### Individual property insufficient to pay legacies

(1) The fact that testator's personal estate was wholly insufficient to pay even his two preferred legacies, not to speak of an additional legacy, warranted inference that testator intended to make available for his preferred and general legacies the property over which he had power of appointment to the extent to which his own property was insufficient to carry out the express Estate, 26 N.Y.S.2d 96, 261 App.Div. 513, affirmed in re Lynn's Will, 39 N.E.2d 266, 287 N.Y. 627.

(2) Will including pecuniary and residuary bequests evidenced intention to dispose of all testator's property, and where estate exclusive of property over which testator had power of appointment under trust was insufficient to pay pecuniary bequests, trust property would be included in estate passing by will, under statute, and pecuniary legatees were entitled to payment from trust property in addition to testator's own property, as against claim of

General power accompanied by beneficial use of property

One who in any instance denies that a general devise executes a general power of appointment must prove by what appears on the face of the will that it was testator's clearly expressed intention the devise in question should not do so, the rule being particularly applicable where general power was accompanied by beneficial use of property, which was the subject of power, and where the power was created by testator.—Thomson v. Fidelity Trust Co., supra.

The testator's intention is to be ascertained by construing the words used in the will,<sup>6</sup> and it has been held that an intention not to exercise the power may not be inferred from extraneous circumstances,<sup>7</sup> but it has also been held that all of the circumstances surrounding the execution of the will<sup>8</sup> and known by the testator<sup>9</sup> may be considered in ascertaining whether or not there was an intention not to exercise the power. A provision of the will relied on to overcome the presumption of intention to exercise the power is to be construed consistently with the presumption if possible.<sup>10</sup>

The testator's knowledge of the power and of his right to exercise it need not be established in order to show that the testator did not intend to exercise the power;<sup>11</sup> but such knowledge, or the lack of it, is a factor to be considered in determining whether or not the testator intended not to exercise the power.<sup>12</sup>

Necessary implication

"Necessary implication" results only where the will permits of no other interpretation, and "necessary" means such as must be; impossible to be otherwise; not to be avoided; inevitable.—Lockwood v. Mildeberger, 53 N.E. 803, 159 N.Y. 181, reargument denied 54 N.E. 1093, 159 N.Y. 562—*Chase Nat. Bank of City of New York v. An intention not to exercise the power has been held in particular cases to be sufficiently manifested,<sup>13</sup> as where the will contains an express statement that the power is not exercised,<sup>14</sup> where the testator makes dispositions which by their very nature are inapplicable to the subject of the power,<sup>15</sup> or where, the residuary estate is given in part to persons not eligible as appointees under the power.<sup>16</sup> It has been held that the statute does not apply to a will which expressly exercises the power,<sup>17</sup> and that an intention not to exercise the power except to the extent indicated is manifested by an express exercise of the power as to part of the appointive property<sup>18</sup> or by an express exercise of the power on a contingency which has not occurred.<sup>19</sup> The fact that the testator in various clauses of his will carefully distinguished his property from that over which he had a power of appointment has been held to indicate that he did not intend to exercise the power by a general residuary clause which made no reference to the power.<sup>20</sup>

Appointee ineligible as to part of property

Where donee's power was restricted as to part of property and general as to balance, the fact that the person to whom residuary estate was given was not eligible as appointee of restricted part did not sufficiently manifest an intention not to exercise the power insofar as it was general.—Wilmington Trust Co. v. Wilmington Trust Co., 186 A. 903, 21 Del.Ch. 188, applying New York law.

17. R.I.—Bancroft v. Bancroft, 27 A.2d 836, 68 R.I. 406.

20. Mass.—Boston Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Prindle, 195 N.E. 793, 290 Mass. 577.

On the other hand, in various cases an intention not to exercise the power has been held not to be sufficiently manifested;<sup>21</sup> this intention has been held not to be sufficiently manifested by the absence of an express reference to the power in the will;<sup>22</sup> a gift of the residue of the donee's estate to persons ineligible as appointees, where the testator at the time of the execution of the will did not know that he had the power;<sup>23</sup> a gift of the residue to the donee's child, where the existence of the power is conditioned on the donee's death without issue;<sup>24</sup> a gift to the person who has a life estate in trust in the appointive property, where the power to appoint is limited to the remainder interest after such life estate;<sup>25</sup> a gift of the residue in trust to a child for life, where the property subject to the power to appoint consists of the remainder interest after a life estate in that child;<sup>26</sup> the fact that the dispositions made in the will would, where applied to the appointive property, in part violate the rule against perpetuities;<sup>27</sup> an express, but wholly or partially ineffective exercise of the power in a prior clause of the will;<sup>28</sup> or by the express exercise of other powers of appointment owned by the testator.<sup>29</sup>

Will executed before grant of power. The circumstances may be such as to evince an intent that a will executed prior to the creation of the power shall not operate as an execution of the power,<sup>30</sup> but the fact that the will does not anticipate the subsequent creation of a power does not show an intention that the will shall not operate as an execution of the power.<sup>31</sup>

d. Burden of Proof; Admissibility of Evidence

As a general rule, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, the burden of proving an intention to execute a power is on one claiming under its execution. Evidence as to the circumstances surrounding the execution of an instrument is admissible, at least where the instrument is ambiguous, to show that the donee intended thereby to exercise a power.

The burden of proving an intention to execute a power is on one claiming under its execution;<sup>32</sup> but where, as discussed supra c (2) of this section, a will of a donee of a power disposing of all his property or estate and containing a general devise or bequest operates as an exercise of the donee's power of appointment or disposition unless an intention to the contrary appears, the burden of proving an intention not to exercise the power is on one so claiming.<sup>33</sup>

Execution of codicil after knowledge of power

The fact that donee of testamentary power to dispose of principal of trust fund by will made recent codicil to his will was insufficient to support implication of intent that will should not operate on appointive property, where codicil made no dispositive provision except to shorten duration of one of trusts and furnished no basis for implication of intent to let power lapse.—In re Slocum's Estate, 81 N.Y.S.2d 120, 192 Misc. 1026.

Residuary clause limited to property "owned by me"

The fact that the residuary clause under which the appointive property passes in lieu of the defective appointive refers only to property "owned by me" or "my estate" does not prevent the application of the text rule.—Chase Nat. Bank of City of New York v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 39 N.Y.S.2d 541, 265 App.Div. 434—Van Wagenen v. Fox, 22 N.Y.S.2d 803.

Special power

The fact that testator specifically exercised a power to appoint "one of the issue of my said father's grandfather as should be living at my death" did not establish absence of intention to exercise a general power of appointment by residuary clause of will, in view of difference in nature of the two powers.—*Adams v. In determining the existence of an intention to exercise a power of appointment, the admission and consideration of evidence of surrounding facts and circumstances are governed by the general rules applicable to the admissibility of such evidence in the construction of wills and other written instruments.<sup>34</sup> Accordingly, in determining whether or not the donee intended to exercise a power by his will, all the circumstances surrounding the execution of the will should be considered,<sup>35</sup> particularly where the will is ambiguous,<sup>36</sup> although such evidence has been held inadmissible where the will is not ambiguous.<sup>37</sup> Since such evidence is admitted merely to aid in ascertaining the donee's intent,<sup>38</sup> it ordinarily must relate to the facts existing at the time of the execution of the will.<sup>39</sup> Thus, evidence of the testator's circumstances at the time of his death ordinarily is not admissible to determine whether or not he intended by his will to execute his power,<sup>40</sup> except, possibly, evidence that he owned no real estate at the time of his death, where he has made a general devise.<sup>41</sup> However, it has also been held that evidence of the condition of the testator's estate and the appointive property is admissible.<sup>42</sup> Evidence has been held admissible as to the nature and amount of the donee's property,<sup>43</sup> the relative intimacy involved in his relations with the beneficiaries of his will and the takers in default of appointment,<sup>44</sup> and to show that he had knowledge of the power of appointment at the time he made his will.<sup>45</sup> While parol evidence is not admissible to show what the testator intended to write,<sup>46</sup> such evidence may be admitted to explain or make certain what the testator has written.<sup>47</sup> Evidence as to statements or declarations of intention made by the testator ordinarily are inadmissible,<sup>48</sup> but evidence as to acts and declarations of the testator may be admissible when offered, not as direct evidence of his intention, but to show facts relevant to his knowledge and the state of his feelings.<sup>49</sup>

of the donee, made in good faith, is conclusive.<sup>51</sup> If the contingency happens, the power may be exercised according to its terms;<sup>52</sup> and, if the contingency has not happened and is no longer liable to happen, the power ceases to have existence, and may not be executed.<sup>53</sup> Where a power to dispose of property is granted provided a certain proportion is given to a designated person, the proviso has been construed as a limitation of the power and not as a condition precedent to its exercise.<sup>54</sup>

Evidence of compliance. One taking under a power the execution of which is dependent on a contingency has the burden of showing that the contingency has happened or the condition has been performed,<sup>55</sup> and a declaration or recital in the instrument executing the power is not sufficient;<sup>56</sup> but it has been held, under a power of sale on condition that the conveyance be bona fide and for a valuable and adequate consideration, that a deed reciting a valuable consideration imports that the conditions have been met.<sup>57</sup> Evidence of a compliance with the conditions is admissible,<sup>58</sup> unless such proof is excluded by the nature of the conditions imposed or by the terms of the power.<sup>59</sup>

Consent of third person. Whether or not the consent of a third person is required to the execution of a power depends on the intention of the donor, as determined from the whole instrument creating the power.<sup>60</sup> Where the execution of a power is conditioned on the consent or approval of a third person, the power cannot be validly exercised without such consent or approval,<sup>61</sup> which must be given in the mode, if any, prescribed by the instrument creating the power<sup>62</sup> or by statute.<sup>63</sup> The spouse of one whose consent is required need not join in the consent in order to render the execution of the power effectual.<sup>64</sup>

Although an instrument executing a power does not show that a required consent to such execution was given, it may be presumed after the lapse of a considerable time, where the instrument creating the power did not require it to be given in any particular manner and there is no evidence that it was not given.<sup>65</sup>

Death of person whose consent is required. The death of the person, or of one of several persons, whose consent is required to the execution of a power, before giving his consent, will prevent its execution,<sup>66</sup> unless an intent to the contrary appears in the instrument creating the power,<sup>67</sup> or it is otherwise provided by statute.<sup>68</sup>

§ 42. Supervision of Court

In the absence of fraud, collusion, or abuse of discretion, the court will not interfere with the execution of a discretionary power by the donee.

The donee of a power ordinarily may execute it as conferred and in the manner designated in the instrument creating the power without the inter-

§ 43. Validity and Sufficiency of Execution

b. Death of appointee before appointing instrument becomes operative

a. In General

The exercise of a power, in order to be valid, must be within the scope of the authority conferred.

The exercise of a power, in order to be valid, must be within the scope of the authority conferred.<sup>71</sup> A conveyance under a power is good to the extent that it is embraced by the power.<sup>72</sup> In determining the validity of an exercise of a power of appointment, the instrument exercising the power is to be read into and as part of the instrument creating the power,<sup>73</sup> and, as discussed in Perpetuities §§ 24, 46, the validity of an appointment with respect to the rule against perpetuities is to be determined as of the effective date of the instrument creating the power, but it has been held that for other purposes, the validity of an appointment by will is to be determined as of the date the will becomes operative rather than as of the date of its execution.<sup>74</sup>

Partial and successive executions. A power may be exercised from time to time by partial and suc-

Intention of donor

In determining whether a power was validly exercised, the intention of donor governs and such intention is not to be thwarted by refinements and distinctions resting on subtlety and ingenuity, lack of technical accuracy in the use of words, unduly stressing the literal meaning of a few words, or by attaching to them a hard and fast meaning not in accordance with the setting in which they were employed.—National State Bank of Newark v. Morrison, 75 A.2d 916, 9 N.J.Super. 552.

Terms and conditions of payment

Where testator left residuary estate to six children "or their heirs per stirpes" and wife was made donee of power of appointment with right to prescribe "terms and conditions" on which any appointed share was to be paid, donee in attempting to dispose of remainders of shares of certain children to their issue exceeded the power, since under the will, an interest in succession was not given to the issue of any child.—In re Fiske's Estate, 88 N.Y.S.2d 446, 195 Misc. 1017.

Precatory provision

In will of donee of power, provisions that "It is my wish" that plates be affixed over door of hospital wards endowed in exercise of the power, reciting that wards were endowed by daughter in memory of her father and mother, and of her husband, respectively, were merely "precatory" and not obligatory, and did not affect the property rights granted and did not render exercise of the power invalid.—In re Jackson's Estate, 25 N.Y.S.2d 102, 175 Misc. 882, affirmed In re Jackson's Will, 30 N.Y.S.2d 840, 262 App.Div. 997, appeal denied 31 N.Y.S.2d 664, 263 App.Div. 707.

Good faith

In determining whether property over which testatrix enjoyed a power of appointment had been validly disposed of, it would be presumed that testatrix drew her will in good faith and expected that legacies bequeathed would be met in realization, not frustration.—In re Williams' Trust, 82 N.Y.S.2d 101—In re Lathers' Will, 64 N.Y.S.2d 757.

cessive executions to suit convenience and promote advantage, as exigencies arise, or as expediency may suggest,<sup>75</sup> and a partial exercise of a power is not invalid because it does not exhaust the power.<sup>76</sup> So, a power over a fee may be executed at one time to pass a life estate or other partial interest and at another to pass the remainder,<sup>77</sup> or to pass at one time a part of the property in fee and afterward the balance.<sup>78</sup>

A power once fully exercised is exhausted and may not thereafter be again exercised.<sup>79</sup> Thus, a power to appoint fully and irrevocably executed by deed may not be exercised by a will which, although previously executed, does not become operative until after the deed.<sup>80</sup> However, an attempted exercise of a power, which is invalid because of fraud or excess, does not prevent a valid reexecution of the power in conformity with its terms.<sup>81</sup>

Confirmation by legislative act. An invalid execution of a power may be confirmed by a general<sup>82</sup> or special<sup>83</sup> legislative act.

b. Death of Appointee before Appointing Instrument Becomes Operative

Where the appointee dies before the appointing instrument takes effect, the appointment lapses, but statutes designed to prevent the failure of testamentary gifts by lapse are generally held to apply to and to save appointments by will where the appointee predeceases the donee.

Unless otherwise provided by statute, where one to whom an interest or estate is appointed by the donee of a power dies before the appointing instrument takes effect, the appointment lapses,<sup>85</sup> except where the appointment is made, not out of mere bounty, but in satisfaction of an obligation, whether or not legally enforceable, existing at the time the appointment takes effect, in which case the gift inures to the estate of the appointee.<sup>86</sup> Statutes designed to prevent the failure of testamentary gifts where the person to whom the gift is made dies before the testator, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Wills § 1217 et seq, also 69 C.J. p 1060 note 51 et seq, are generally held to apply to and to save appointments by will where the appointee predeceases the donee.<sup>87</sup> Such statutes have been held not to apply to appointments under a limited power,<sup>88</sup> and, in any event, they do not enlarge a limited power of appointment, so that where the persons substituted by the statute for the deceased appointee is not within the authorized group of appointees, the appointment is ineffective.<sup>89</sup> The person who takes the appointive property under such a statute takes as a substitute appointee and not as heir of the deceased appointee.<sup>90</sup>

§ 44. — What Law Governs

It is generally held that questions as to the validity, sufficiency, construction, and operation of the execution of a power are governed by the law of the donor's domicile, and, in the case of a power as to real property, by the law of the place where the property is situated.

Although there is some authority holding that the execution of a power is governed by the law of the domicile of the donee of the power,<sup>92</sup> it is generally held that an instrument executing a power is governed by the law of the jurisdiction which controls the effect of the instrument creating the power,<sup>93</sup> and that questions as to the validity, sufficiency, construction, and operation of the execution of a power are to be determined by the law of the domicile of the donor of the power,<sup>94</sup> unless the power was created in contemplation of the law of

Form and substance

Ordinarily, in case of personalty, questions as to both form and substance relating to validity and effect of an instrument exercising a power of appointment created by will are determined by the law of the domicile of the donor of the power.—Amerige v. Attorney General, 88 N.E.2d 126, 324 Mass. 648.

Intention to exercise power

(1) Whether will disposing of all donee's property is an exercise of his power is governed by the law of the donor's domicile.

Pa.—In re Barton, 35 A.2d 266, 348 Pa. 279.

(2) Will disposing of all donee's property as exercise of power see supra § 40 c.

Validity of will

(1) Power of appointment by will was not effectively executed by will not validly executed according to law of state of donor's domicile, even though will was valid and probated in state of donee's domicile.—Fidelity Union Trust Co. v. Caldwell, 44 A.2d 842, 137 N.J.Eq. 362.

(2) Will of donee, invalid as such under laws of his domicile, is nevertheless valid as exercising power of appointment where will would be valid under laws of donor's domicile.—In re Sloan's Estate, 46 P.2d 1007, 7 Cal.App.2d 319.

Probate

Will exercising power need not be probated in donor's state.—In re Smith's Will, 57 N.Y.S.2d 189.

Jurisdiction and control by courts

Until property vests absolutely in beneficiary, it remains subject to jurisdiction and control of court of the donor's domicile.—In re Walbridge's Estate, 33 N.Y.S.2d 47, 178 Misc. 32.

Trust created by exercise of power

(1) Trust created by exercise of power of appointment must be administered in jurisdiction of donor's domicile.—In re Walbridge's Estate, 33 N.Y.S.2d 47, 178 Misc. 32—In re Burnham's Estate, 82 N.Y.S.2d 844—Matter of Walker, 53 N.Y.S.2d 102—In re Phelps' Estate, 45 N.Y.S.2d 621.

(2) The trustees of such trust must qualify in that jurisdiction.—In re Warren's Will, 81 N.Y.S.2d 400, 192 Misc. 881—In re Walbridge's Estate, 33 N.Y.S.2d 47, 178 Misc. 32—In re Burnham's Estate, 82 N.Y.S.2d 844—Matter of Walker, 53 N.Y.S.2d 102—In re Phelps' Estate, 45 N.Y.S.2d 621.

(3) The foregoing rules have been held to apply, even though some of the property appointed in trust is realty located in the donee's state, since it is held that the realty is to be deemed personally as far as the trust administration is concerned.—Matter of Bradford's Estate, 1 N.Y.

some other jurisdiction applying to its exercise.<sup>95</sup> There is authority that the law of the situs of a trust governs as to the validity and sufficiency of the execution of a power with respect to such trust property<sup>96</sup> so that where, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Trusts § 80, also 65 C.J. p 334 note 63 et seq, the situs of a trust of personal property is the domicile of the settlor of the trust at the time of its creation, the law of that jurisdiction has been held to govern as the validity and sufficiency of an exercise of a power with respect to the trust property, even though the settlor of the trust or donor of the power is domiciled in another jurisdiction at the time of his death or at the time of the execution of the power,<sup>97</sup> and this rule has been applied where the same person is the settlor of the trust and donee of the power.<sup>98</sup> On the other hand, it has been held, in the case of an inter vivos trust reserving a power in the settlor, that the validity and sufficiency of the execution of the power in the settlor's will are to be determined by the law of the jurisdiction where he was domiciled at his death.<sup>99</sup>

It has been held that an orphans' court having general jurisdiction may enforce a power of appointment as to personal property in a trust the funds of which are located in the state, even though the donor and donee of the power were not residents, where the power was exercised in a will probated in the state.<sup>1</sup>

The exercise of a power as to real property is governed by the law of the place where it is situated.<sup>2</sup>

The law in force at the time of the execution of a power, rather than the law in force at the time of its creation, has been held to govern as to the validity and sufficiency of the exercise of a power.<sup>3</sup>

Testamentary and inter vivos powers distinguished

"Cases dealing with powers having a testamentary origin are . . . to be differentiated from cases which involve powers originating in agreements inter vivos, when a question involving conflict of laws is presented. . . . In an agreement inter vivos the element of domicile lacks the importance which practical considerations have accorded it in the law of wills. There is more room for the play of intent. I can see no reason why the intent of a donor should not be allowed full play in the matter of selecting the jurisdiction under which the validity of a trust inter vivos is in all respects to be determined, providing of course the property composing the corpus of the trust be delivered to a trustee in the selected jurisdiction and there administered. Indeed, even in a trust of testamentary creation, it has been held that intent is to be indulged to that extent."—Wilmington

Power as to trust property to be administered in another jurisdiction

Where testator, although a resident of New York, appointed trustees who were residents of Massachusetts, and one of them was the donee of the power of appointment by will, and a substantial portion of the property of testator consisted of realty situated in Massachusetts, and will provided that appointment of successor trustees was to be subject to approval of judge of probate in certain county in Massachusetts, testator would be deemed to have intended that trust should be administered in Massachusetts, and law of Massachusetts governed power of appointment with respect to personality, rather than New York law.—*Amerige v. ## § 45. — Fraud; Illusory Appointments

b. Illusory appointments

a. Fraud

An exercise of a limited power is fraudulent where the exercise is for a corrupt purpose, or for purposes foreign to the power, or where the power is exercised because of a benefit conferred on, or promised to be conferred on, a person who is not an object of the power.

While the power or motive of the donee of a general or absolute power in the exercise of the power ordinarily is immaterial as far as the validity of his action is concerned,<sup>4</sup> the donee of a limited power must act in entire good faith and with a view to the accomplishment of the real purpose for which it was created,<sup>5</sup> and may not do indirectly that which it is unlawful for him to do directly.<sup>6</sup> An exercise of a limited power will be deemed fraudulent where the exercise is for a corrupt purpose,<sup>7</sup> where it is exercised for the benefit of the donee or a third person, where the donee or third person is not an object of the power,<sup>8</sup> where it is made because of a benefit conferred on, or promised to be conferred on, a person who is not an object of the power,<sup>9</sup> or where the exercise is for purposes foreign to the power.<sup>10</sup> An appointment made to an object of a limited power under an agreement by him to settle or dispose of the subject matter in a manner desired by the donee for his own benefit or that of a stranger, or on condition, or with the purpose that it shall be so settled or disposed of, or any other benefit obtained by the donee, is void.<sup>11</sup>

However, it has been held that, where no act on the part of the donee tending toward fraud and no intention to commit a fraud on the power appear, the mere fact that the appointee applies the property or agrees with a third person to apply it for the benefit of one in whose favor the donee could not legally have exercised the power does not constitute a fraud or make the appointment void.<sup>12</sup> Moreover, the donee may so exercise a limited power as incidentally to benefit himself<sup>13</sup> or a stranger,<sup>14</sup> where the purpose for which the power was created is nevertheless carried out and the power would have been so exercised without regard to such incidental benefit.

A release or agreement not to execute a limited power made by the donee in consideration of a benefit to himself has been held to be as much a fraud on the power as an execution for his own benefit.<sup>15</sup>

Evidence of fraud. The burden of proving a fraud on a power is on one attacking the donee's acts.<sup>16</sup> Where the proof leaves it doubtful whether a power of appointment has been legally or illegally exercised, the presumption in favor of meritorious claimants is in favor of its legality.<sup>17</sup> Inadequacy of the price brought at a sale under a power, without evidence of fraud or collusion, is not sufficient to impeach the sale.<sup>18</sup>

b. Illusory Appointments

In some jurisdictions, the appointment of a merely nominal share under a nonexclusive power is illusory and void, but in other jurisdictions this doctrine is not followed.

49 C.J. p 1300 note 98.

In furtherance of the rule, as discussed supra § 24, that a nonexclusive power of appointment among two or more persons must be so exercised, if at all, as to give each object a share or portion of the subject matter, it has been held in some jurisdictions that such a power may not legally be exercised except by giving to each object a beneficial interest or share in the property fairly proportioned to the whole, although not necessarily equal to the shares of the others, and that the appointment of a merely nominal share is illusory and void in equity,<sup>19</sup> although good at law,<sup>20</sup> unless the appointee thereof has been otherwise provided for by the donee.<sup>21</sup> In other jurisdictions, however, the doctrine of illusory appointments has been repudiated or has never been recognized, and a nominal or unsubstantial appointment is valid.<sup>22</sup> In any event, the doctrine of illusory appointments has no application where the power is not a nonexclusive power.<sup>23</sup>

§ 46. — Partial Invalidity in General

Where the execution of a power is partly invalid, it will nevertheless be given effect as far as it is valid, unless the valid and invalid parts are not severable or the donee's scheme of distribution is more closely approximated by treating the exercise of the power as wholly ineffective.

The fact that the execution of a power is partly invalid does not invalidate it in toto, where the valid and invalid parts are severable, but it is given effect as far as it is valid,<sup>24</sup> but the exercise of a power is invalid in toto where the valid and invalid parts are so intermingled that it is not possible to fix a line of division between them,<sup>25</sup> or where the donee's scheme of distribution is more closely approximated by treating the exercise of the power as wholly ineffective than by treating it as partly valid and partly invalid.<sup>26</sup>

§ 47. — Execution in Excess of Power

An attempt to exercise a power in excess of its terms is good within the limits of the power, unless the authorized and unauthorized parts are inseparably connected.

An attempt to execute a power in excess of its terms is void as to the excess, but good within the limits of the power,<sup>27</sup> unless the authorized and un-

§ 48. Aiding Defective Execution

Equity will aid the defective execution of a power where the defect is one of form and not of substance and where the party seeking relief shows some equity superior to that of the one against whom relief is sought.

Where the execution of a power created or reserved by the act of a donor is defective in form, it may be aided or corrected by a court of equity,<sup>29</sup> provided an intention on the part of the donee to execute the power,<sup>30</sup> and an attempt to effectuate that intent, partial in its nature and falling short of accomplishment,<sup>31</sup> appear, but even where the intention to execute is shown, equity cannot relieve against the defective execution of a power created by law, or dispense with any of the formalities required thereby for its due execution.<sup>32</sup>

What defects may be aided. Equity will correct only matters of form in the execution of a power, and not matters of substance or essence.<sup>33</sup> Equity cannot make valid the attempted execution of a power which is void for want of authority in the person who attempts its execution,<sup>34</sup> as where the condition on which it was to be exercised has never happened,<sup>35</sup> or where the execution conflicts with the rule or a statute against perpetuities.<sup>36</sup>

In whose favor equity interferes. Before a court of equity will aid a defective execution of a power the party who seeks relief must show in himself some equity superior to that of him against whom relief is asked.<sup>37</sup> In accordance with the rule, equity will ordinarily aid a defective execution of a power in favor of a charity,<sup>38</sup> creditors,<sup>39</sup> purchasers for value,<sup>40</sup> or a wife or legitimate child of the donee;<sup>41</sup> but it will not interpose in favor of volunteers,<sup>42</sup> or the husband of the donee,<sup>43</sup> or grandchildren, at least as against children.<sup>44</sup>

§ 49. Operation and Effect of Execution

One in whose favor a power is duly exercised takes the interest or estate over which the power was created.

One in whose favor a power is duly exercised takes the interest or estate over which the power was created,<sup>45</sup> except such portion or interest as may be expressly excepted.<sup>46</sup> The exercise of a power defeats interests limited in default of or subject to its execution.<sup>47</sup> Where, however, the

by a person having the right to the income from a trust for life with power to appoint by will as to the remainder does not carry with it income accrued but not paid over during such person's life.<sup>53</sup>

Allocation of appointive property where power exercised by donee's will. Where a general power of appointment is exercised by the donee's will as a whole, or where his will disposes of the owned and appointive property as a single fund, the appointed property is allocated to the various dispositions in such manner as to give the maximum effect to such dispositions.<sup>54</sup> Thus, where the dispositions made do not violate the rule against perpetuities as to the property owned by the donee, but some of the dispositions violate that rule as to the appointive property, the appointive property will be allocated as far as possible to those dispositions which do not involve a violation of the rule;<sup>55</sup> but this rule will not be applied where the possible violation of the rule against perpetuities arises, not from the donee's dispositions, but from appointments made by a subsequent donee on whom the original donee has conferred a further power of appointment.<sup>56</sup> Moreover, the rule is not one of law to be applied indiscriminately to save the exercise of a power which would otherwise fail; rather, it is an indication that the courts try to determine the intent of the testator and to do equity.<sup>57</sup> Where the residuary clause of a will is construed as exercising a power of appointment, the appointed property goes in full to the residuary legatees even though the testator's own property is insufficient to pay his general legatees.<sup>58</sup>

Power exercised by particular clause or by will as a whole see supra § 40.

(1) In general.—In re Spears' Will, 271 N.Y.S. 110, 151 Misc. 181.

(2) Fact that the testator intended to merge the appointive estate with his own is clearly implied from the express exercise of the power of appointment, coupled with the direction that the appointive property be paid to his executor.—In re Lathers' Will, 64 N.Y.S.2d 757.

(3) Where testator at outset of will expressed intention to dispose of all property of which he might have right or power to dispose at death, estate over which testator had power of appointment was merged with testator's individual estate.—In re Wainwright's Will, 289 N.Y.S. 510, 248 App.Div. 336, motion granted 291 N.Y.S. 180, 248 App.Div. 891—In re Bearns' Estate, 65 N.Y.S. 2d 199, 186 Misc. 742.

(4) Where power of appointment was expressly exercised by donee's will giving stated sums with proviso that each legacy should not exceed a stated percentage of "my net residuary estate available for distribution," and will provided that quoted phrase should include the net amount distributable as result of exercise of power of appointment, donee intended to blend the appointive property with her own personal net residuary estate.—In re Morse's Estate, 80 N.Y.S.2d 541.

Specific legacy of stock

Where a testatrix exercises a power of appointment, directing that the appointed estate be added to her own and that the combined fund or estate be disposed of as thereafter provided, and by a later clause in her will gives her holdings of stock in a certain corporation to specific legatees, the bequest will be construed to include such stock in the appointed estate as well as in testatrix's own estate.—In re White's Estate, 63 Pa.Dist. & Co. 408.

Renunciation by legatees

In determining whether property over which testatrix enjoyed a power of appointment was validly disposed of, effective intent of testatrix was to be weighed as of time she made her disposition, unaffected by fact that general legatees by compromise agreement had renounced general legacies under which such property was validly disposed of; attempted disposition did not fail because general legatees under compromise had renounced, in view of fact that renunciation was on stipulated terms that such property should be applied as therein directed, one of which purposes would constitute a valid disposition of the appointed property, although another was invalid, since doctrine of "marshaling" could be invoked and the valid purpose upheld.—In re Williams' Trust, 82 N.Y. S.2d 101.

Intent of testator with respect to disposition of property over which he enjoys a power of appointment must be ascertained and given effect if possible; intent may be gleaned not only from language of will itself but from other factors such as financial means and the conditions confronting him when will was drawn and which may be regarded, reasonably, as having affected his design.—In re Williams' Trust, 82 N.Y.S.2d 101—In re Lathers' Will, 64 N.Y.S. 2d 757.

Conditional appointment. When an appointment is conditioned on the performance or nonperformance of a particular act by the appointee, he takes the property subject to the condition.<sup>59</sup>

Repudiation of appointment. An appointee may repudiate the appointment or refuse to receive it, in which case the exercise of the power is nugatory,<sup>60</sup> although it would seem that it does not necessarily constitute a failure to appoint such as to allow the property to pass to those to whom it is limited in default of appointment;<sup>61</sup> and an appointee so repudiating an appointment may take or hold title under another provision of the instrument creating the power.<sup>62</sup>

Illegal appointment. An illegal appointment, such as one which violates the rule against perpetuities, is no appointment.<sup>63</sup>

§ 51. — Of Power of Sale

A purchaser at a sale under a power can take no greater interest or estate than the donor of the power had; while every presumption is indulged in favor of a bona fide purchaser at such a sale, he must satisfy himself of the existence of the power at the time of the purchase.

A purchaser at a sale under a power can take no greater estate or interest than the donor had;<sup>64</sup> and, where a sale by a donee is made avowedly under the provisions of the power, the purchaser can demand only such title as was in contemplation of the parties when the sale was made.<sup>65</sup> Every reasonable presumption is indulged in favor of a bona fide purchaser at such a sale;<sup>66</sup> and while he must satisfy himself as to the existence of the power at the time of his purchase,<sup>67</sup> and that any condition or contingency attached to its execution has been fulfilled,<sup>68</sup> or any restriction on its exercise observed,<sup>69</sup> in order for him to be affected by a fraudulent or illegal execution of the power on the part of the donee, either participation in the fraud or notice of it must be brought home to him.<sup>70</sup> Where a power of sale is exercised by the life tenant in fraud of the rights of the remaindermen and without consideration, the deed conveys only the estate of the life tenant and not that of the remaindermen.<sup>71</sup> The infant grantee of an estate subject

Clear and unequivocal renunciation required

A renunciation or disclaimer of a gift by appointee under a power, must be clear and unequivocal; where grandson executed a document stating that he elected to take under trust directly from his grandfather instead of taking under his father who by will exercised power of appointment given by trust instrument, and executed a document stating that by such election grandson did not desire to waive his rights to take income by virtue of appointment to him by will of his father, and that it was not his intention to disclaim, renounce, or decline any gift under the will of the father, there was no renunciation or disclaimer by grandson of right to take under will and codicil in which his father exercised power of appointment.—*Garfield v. ### Election by appointee

Where will gave life beneficiary of trust estate power of appointment, in default of which and in absence of issue of life beneficiary, the life beneficiary's next of kin would take, and life beneficiary, without ever having had issue, attempted to appoint her surviving sisters, who were her sole next of kin, such sisters could accept title as appointees or as remaindermen under will that created trust estate.—*Grinnell v. to a power of sale is bound by a proper exercise of the power.<sup>72</sup>

Rights of successive purchaser from donee. One who purchases from the donee of a power, with knowledge that the power to sell has theretofore been conditionally exhausted by the making of an executory contract of sale to another, takes the property subject to the chance of his conveyance becoming inoperative by the final fulfillment of the executory contract.<sup>73</sup>

Purchase money. On the sale of property under a power the donee, and not the beneficial owners, is entitled to receive the purchase money,<sup>74</sup> and ordinarily he alone can bring an action for it,<sup>75</sup> although gifts of the proceeds may constitute an equitable charge on the property which can be enforced by the persons entitled thereto.<sup>76</sup>

Duty of purchaser to see to application. In the absence of bad faith, a purchaser at a sale under a power is not bound to see that the purchase money is properly applied by the donee.<sup>77</sup> It has been held, however, that a purchaser who pays the donee in depreciated currency so far participates in a fraud that he may be required to pay for the property at its actual value or the sale will be held void.<sup>78</sup>

§ 52. — Rights of Subsequent Purchasers

Subsequent purchasers of property sold or appointed under a power must take notice of the extent of the power.

Subsequent purchasers of property appointed or sold under a power granted by an instrument of record must take notice of the extent of the power.<sup>79</sup> An appointee or a purchaser at a sale under a power cannot convey to another, not an innocent purchaser, a better title than he himself possesses;<sup>80</sup> but an innocent purchaser in good faith is protected against fraud or illegality in the exercise of the power whereby his grantor acquired title.<sup>81</sup>

§ 53. — Rights of Creditors

An appointee or purchaser under a power takes a good title against creditors of the persons to whom the subject matter would pass in default of execution of the power.

An appointee or a purchaser at a bona fide sale, under a power, takes a good title against creditors or lienors of the persons to whom the subject matter would pass in default of execution of the power;<sup>82</sup> but a purchaser's title is subject to the rights of the donor's creditors, where the person to whom the proceeds of the sale are limited is a mere volunteer.<sup>83</sup>

The rights of the donee's creditors are discussed supra § 32.

§ 54. Revocation of Execution

A power once effectually exercised may not be revoked unless the right to revoke has been expressly reserved.

A power once effectually exercised cannot be revoked unless the right to revoke has been expressly reserved.<sup>84</sup> The question whether or not the execution of a power is revoked by a particular act or instrument depends on the intention of the donee,<sup>85</sup> and no technical form of revocation is essential.<sup>86</sup> An appointment by will is revoked by the revocation of the will,<sup>87</sup> or where the power is surrendered,<sup>88</sup>

or extinguished, or exercised by deed,<sup>89</sup> before the will becomes operative. It has been held under statute that the rule that a will executed by an unmarried person is deemed revoked by his subsequent marriage does not apply as to the exercise of a power by a will executed before marriage,<sup>90</sup> unless the property would pass in default of appointment to those who would have been entitled to it had it been the donee's property and he had died intestate.<sup>91</sup>

§ 55. Failure to Execute

Equity will not relieve against the nonexecution of a power except a power in trust, or in some cases, a power to appoint among a class, and where a power is not exercised, the property ordinarily passes to those to whom it was limited in default of execution, and in the absence of such limitation, to the donor or those entitled by descent from him.

While equity may in a proper case aid or correct a defective execution of a power, as discussed supra § 48, ordinarily it will not relieve against the non-execution of a power.<sup>93</sup> So, when a power terminates without having been executed, the subject matter passes to those to whom it may have been limited in default of execution,<sup>94</sup> and, in the absence of any such limitation, ordinarily remains in the donor or those entitled thereto by descent from him;<sup>95</sup> and, similarly, where a power is partially unexecuted at its termination, the portion of the subject matter or the interest therein as to which it has not been exercised usually remains in the donor or passes as in default of execution.<sup>96</sup> The failure to exercise a power ordinarily does not vest any estate in the donee or those entitled by descent from him.<sup>97</sup>

Power in trust. Equity will execute a power coupled with a trust duty where the donee fails to do so.<sup>98</sup>

Power to appoint among class. Where a power to appoint among certain persons or a class remains unexecuted, and there is no limitation over in default of execution, equity will divide the subject matter equally among the members of the designated class;<sup>99</sup> and where the class in such case consists

In default of will

Succession through donee

Where beneficiary, given power to appoint by will distributees of trust estate on his death, died before reaching majority, he did not fail to exercise such power "within the time provided therefor", so that provision of tax statute that succession through donee of power of appointment shall be deemed to have taken place, where person possessing power fails to exercise it within such time, is inapplicable.—In re Maxhimer's Estate, 40 N.E.2d 941, 139 Ohio St. 444.

of only one member at the time the power terminates, the whole of the subject matter passes to him.<sup>1</sup> Where such a power has been partially executed by the appointment of a share to one of the objects thereof, and remains unexecuted as to the other objects and the balance of the property, it has been held that the one to whom an appointment has been made can receive a share of the residue only by bringing into hotchpot the portion appointed to him.<sup>2</sup> Where the donee's power is limited to appointing to one member of a class, it has been held that the property is not to be divided among the members of the class on a failure to exercise the power.<sup>3</sup>

Ineffective appointment. Ordinarily, where an appointment is ineffective, it is the same as though there were a failure to appoint and the property passes as in default of appointment;<sup>4</sup> and, where the appointment contains a direction for the devolution of the property in the event the appointment is ineffective in whole or in part, such direction will govern as to the devolution of the property.<sup>5</sup> However, where the donee of a general power makes an ineffective appointment, the property passes to the donee or his estate where the donee manifests an intent to assume control of the property for all purposes and not only for the limited purpose of giving effect to the expressed appointment,<sup>6</sup> and the application of this rule is not limited to instances where the donor has made no provision for the devolution of the property in default of appointment.<sup>7</sup> Where a donee of a general power appoints to a trustee on a trust which fails, there is a resulting trust in favor of the donee or his estate unless the donee manifests an inconsistent intent.<sup>8</sup>

Tenants in common

Where a power is left unexecuted, the court will execute it as a trust by dividing the fund equally among the objects or persons in favor of whom it was given or from whom the selection might have been made on the ground that equality is equity, and, where there is no rule in the gift which can apply to determine the proportions, the court will make the distribution per capita, and everybody within the rule will take equally as tenants in common.—*Oglesby v. #### Reason for rule

Where the donee's power is limited to appointing to one of a class, he is not authorized to distribute the property to more than one or to all; equal distribution among the members of the class would frustrate the donor's purpose where effected by the donee, and it would equally frustrate his purpose where effected by the law.

Blending of appointive and individual estates

(1) The intent of the donee of the power to assume control of the property for all purposes is manifested by provisions in the instrument of appointment which blend the appointive property with the property owned by the donee.—Fiduciary Trust Co. v. Mishou, 75 N.E.2d 3, 321 Mass. 615.—Old Colony Trust Co. v. Allen, 29 N.E.2d 310, 307 Mass. 40.

(2) Such blending occurs where the residuary clause of a will is construed to be an exercise of the power.—Old Colony Trust Co. v. Allen, supra.

Ineffective appointment by residuary clause

Where the power to appoint is exercised by the residuary clause of a will, but the provisions thereof, while valid as to the testator's estate, violate the rule against perpetuities as to the appointive property, the appointive estate passes as intestate property of the donee.—*Fiduciary Trust Co. v. P. P. I. See Abbreviations 1 C.J.S. p 276 note 5.

PRACTICA. In Spanish law, procedure.<sup>3</sup>

PRACTICABLE. The word "practicable," as defined by lexicographers, has a number of significations,<sup>4</sup> and is variously defined as meaning capable of being put into practice, done, or accomplished;<sup>5</sup> capable of being done or accomplished<sup>6</sup> with available means or resources;<sup>7</sup> capable of being performed or effected;<sup>8</sup> feasible;<sup>9</sup> feasible, fair, and convenient;<sup>10</sup> possible of execution or performance.<sup>11</sup>

The word is also defined as meaning that which may be done, practiced, or accomplished;<sup>12</sup> that which may be practiced or performed;<sup>13</sup> that which can be put into practice;<sup>14</sup> that which is performable, feasible, possible.<sup>15</sup>

It is further defined as meaning passable;<sup>16</sup> usable;<sup>17</sup> being of practical value or advantage; desirable.<sup>18</sup>

Whether a thing is practicable depends on the actualities, the very facts and circumstances of the case,<sup>19</sup> and an act is practicable if conditions and circumstances are such as to permit its performance or to render it feasible;<sup>20</sup> but a thing is not practicable if some element essential to its accomplishment is lacking.<sup>21</sup>

"Practicable" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "feasible" see 35 C.J.S. p 758 note 58, "necessary" see 65 C.J.S. p 270 note 60, and "prac-

PRACTICE.

As a noun. In its ordinary and popular sense,<sup>44</sup> "practice" is not a technical legal word,<sup>45</sup> and its meaning varies widely and depends very much on the connection in which it is used.<sup>46</sup> Standing alone the word is vague, and its outline becomes definite only when associated with other definite ideas,<sup>47</sup> and considered generally, without regard to context, the term is not capable of useful construction,<sup>48</sup> and anything may be asserted of it.<sup>49</sup> However, it has been said that in its ordinary and popular sense it has a readily comprehensible and comprehensive meaning.<sup>50</sup>

"Practice" ordinarily implies uniformity and continuity,<sup>51</sup> and does not denote a few isolated acts,<sup>52</sup> and uniformity and universality, general notoriety and acquiescence, must characterize the actions on which a practice is predicated.<sup>53</sup> In a broad sense "practice" may include inaction or failure to act, as well as affirmative action.<sup>54</sup>

Practice and Procedure in Law

The word "practice," as used in the law, is sometimes referred to as being a technical term,<sup>82</sup> but the word "procedure," as a legal term, is so broad in its signification that it is seldom employed as a term of art,<sup>83</sup> and it is not well understood,<sup>84</sup> and is difficult to describe or define.<sup>85</sup>

Together, the words "practice" and "procedure," in a larger sense, and as used in law,<sup>86</sup> mean or include the mode of proceeding by which a legal right is enforced,<sup>87</sup> as distinguished from the substantive law which gives or declares the right.<sup>88</sup> The words "practice" and "procedure," separately, have this same signification. "Practice" is defined as meaning the mode of proceeding by which a legal right is enforced,<sup>89</sup> as distinguished from the law which gives or defines the right;<sup>90</sup> and "procedure" is likewise defined as meaning the modes of conduct of litigation and judicial business, as distinguished from the branch of the law which gives or defines rights.<sup>91</sup>

It is difficult to determine from the adjudicated cases whether the term "practice" covers matters which are included in the meaning of the word "procedure," or whether the term "procedure" includes such matters as are within the scope of the word "practice." It has been said that "practice" is broad enough to cover all matters of judicial procedure,<sup>92</sup> but it also has been said that the word "procedure," as generally defined,<sup>93</sup> includes in its meaning whatever is embraced by the three technical words "pleading," "evidence," and "practice,"<sup>94</sup> and "practice" in this sense means those legal rules which direct the course of proceeding to bring its phases, until it is finally completed.<sup>8</sup> It has been said that practice deals with writs, summonses, pleadings, affidavits, notices, motions, petitions, orders, trials, judgments, appeals, costs, and executions.<sup>9</sup>

Procedure is the machinery for carrying on the suit,<sup>10</sup> and it includes pleading, process, evidence, and practice,<sup>11</sup> whether in the trial court or the appellate court, or in the processes by which causes are carried to appellate courts for review, or in laying the foundation for such review;<sup>12</sup> in fact, procedure includes every step which may be taken from the beginning to the end of a case.<sup>13</sup> Procedure is the means whereby the court reaches out to restore rights and remedy wrongs,<sup>14</sup> and it has been said that it must never become more important than the purpose which it seeks to accomplish.<sup>15</sup>

Under some circumstances "practice" and "procedure" are synonymous,<sup>16</sup> but under other circumstances the terms are distinguishable,<sup>17</sup> "procedure"

being the broader term<sup>18</sup> since it includes rules of evidence,<sup>19</sup> and evidence is generally regarded as a part of procedure, as stated in Evidence § 1 and Criminal Law § 530.

"Practice" has also been compared with, or distinguished from, "pleading" see Pleading § 1.

"Procedure" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "process" see the C.J.S. title Process § 1, also 50 C.J. p 441 note 7, and has been compared with, or distinguished from, "form" see 37 C.J.S. p 113 note 48, "jurisdiction" see Courts § 15 c, "substantive law" see 52 C.J.S. p 1026 note 64, and "trial" see the C.J.S. title Trial § 1, also 50 C.J. p 425 note 68 [d].

PRACTICO. In Spanish law, an experienced man; an expert.<sup>20</sup>

PRACTITIONER. One who practices; especially, one who exercises an art, science, or profession, as law, medicine, or engineering.<sup>21</sup>

"Practitioner" with respect to prac-

PRÆCIPE. In practice, an original writ, drawn up in the alternative, commanding defendant to do the thing required or show the reason why he has not done it.<sup>24</sup> Also, a paper addressed to the prothonotary, entitled in the court out of which the writ is to issue, dated the day of its filing, containing with particularity the names of the parties, showing the form of the action, commanding, as its name denotes, the issuance of a writ of the kind and in the manner directed, and signed by the attorney or by the party, if he conducts his suit alone. Mere form is not a determining factor, but the paper, whatever its form, must contain a positive order to put the judicial machinery in motion.<sup>25</sup>

The commencement of an action by præcipe is discussed in Actions § 129 b (7), and the filing of a præcipe as the commencement of an action to stop the running of the statute of limitations is treated in Limitations of Actions § 265. The requirement of a præcipe for a transcript on appeal is treated in Appeal and Error § 1028 b. As a direction to the clerk of court to issue process see Process § 9.

PRÆDIUM. Latin, in the civil law, land; an estate; a tenement; a piece of landed property.<sup>26</sup>

Prædium dominans. In the civil law, the estate to which the service is due; the ruling estate.<sup>27</sup>

Prædium serviens. In the civil law, an estate subject to a privilege or service;<sup>28</sup> an estate which suffers a servitude or easement to another estate; the servient tenement.<sup>29</sup>

CET. See 49 C.J. p 1316 note 9.

PRÆMUNIRE. In English law, the name of an offense against the king and his government, although not subject to capital punishment.<sup>30</sup>

PRÆPROPERA CONSILIA BARO SUNT PROS-
PERA. See 49 C.J. p 1316 note 11.

PRÆSCRIPTIO. In the Roman law, limitation.<sup>31</sup>

Maxims. "Præscriptio" as the first word of maxims as to which there have been no recent applications see 49 C.J. p 1316 notes 14-16.

PRÆSENTARE; PRÆSENTIA; PRÆSTAT;
PRÆSUMATUR; PRÆSUMITUR; PRÆTEXTU. As the first words of maxims as to which there have been no recent applications see 49 C.J. p 1316 notes 17-22, 28, 29.

PRÆSUMERE. A Latin word consisting of "præ" and "sumere."<sup>32</sup> It signifies to take or assume a matter beforehand, without proof; to take for granted.<sup>33</sup>

PRÆSUMPTIO. A Latin word meaning presumption. Also, intrusion, or the unlawful taking of anything.<sup>34</sup>

Præsumptio juris et de jure. A presumption of law and of right; a presumption which the law will not suffer to be contradicted; a conclusive or irrebuttable presumption.<sup>35</sup> It is sometimes written "presumptio juris et de jure."<sup>36</sup>

Maxims. "Præsumptio" and "præsumptiones" as the first words of maxims as to which there have been no recent applications see 49 C.J. p 1316 notes 23, 25-27.

PRÆVENIRE. A Latin term meaning to come before; to precede.<sup>37</sup>

tice of medicine see Physicians and Surgeons § 1.

A practitioner of a trade or profession, within the contemplation of a grandfather clause, is one who habitually holds himself out to the public as such, and, although the extent of his practice is not controlling, it must be sufficiently regular, according to the circumstances of the particular case.—State ex rel. PRAGMATICA. That portion of the Spanish law which is apart from the royal decrees and ordinances.<sup>39</sup>

PRAGMATICO. In Spanish law, a commentator or glossator of the laws.<sup>40</sup>

PRAISE. The expression of love and gratitude for benefits received;<sup>47</sup> especially the joyful tribute of gratitude or homage rendered to the Divine Being; the act of glorifying or extolling the Creator; worship, often in song, in distinction from petition or confession.<sup>48</sup>

PRAY. Ask earnestly; beg; entreat; supplicate.<sup>49</sup>

PRAYER. A reverent petition to some divinity or object of worship.<sup>50</sup> Prayer is always worship, and is said to be a chief part of worship.<sup>51</sup>

In law a prayer is the request contained in a bill in equity that the court will grant the process, aid, or relief which complainant desires, as stated in Equity § 215. The prayer for relief in actions at law is treated in Pleading § 95; in admiralty actions see Admiralty § 119 d. In the District of Columbia the word "prayer" is colloquially used to denote an instruction offered by one of the parties, as stated in Federal Courts § 325. For other references see Federal Courts §§ 128, 144, the index to the title Appeal and Error, and consult the Descriptive-Word Index.

PRE. A prefix commonly used and understood as denoting a priority of time or place,<sup>52</sup> and defined as meaning before, in front, in advance.<sup>53</sup>

PREAMBLE. A declaration of purpose;<sup>54</sup> an introduction or preface, as to a book, document, or the like; an introductory portion;<sup>55</sup> an introductory or explanatory statement.<sup>56</sup>

Preambles are frequently employed in ordinances, and as an aid to the construction of ordinances are discussed in Municipal Corporations § 442 h. Preambles are also employed in statutes and, in this connection, are defined in the C.J.S. title Statutes § 1, also 59 C.J. p 1004 notes 89 [a], [b]. The use of preambles is discussed in Statutes § 65, also 59 C.J. p 1004 note 89 [c]. The construction of a statute by reference to the preamble is treated in Statutes § 349, also 59 C.J. p 1004 note 88—p 1005 note 93. See also Constitutional Law §§ 68 a, 71 a.

PRECARIO. In Spanish law, that which is revocable, as a loan, at the will of him who makes it.<sup>57</sup>

Precatory words. Words of recommendation, entreaty, or the like, accompanying a gift and implying a desire or wish on the part of the donor that the property given should be used for the benefit of some designated person or be applied to some designated purpose.<sup>69</sup> They are not imperative in form, since that would result in a contradiction in terms,<sup>70</sup> and they generally imply discretion unless a different sense is irresistibly forced by the context.<sup>71</sup> Precatory words are more often deemed mandatory when directed to an executor, but generally when directed to devisees are not made imperative unless it appears that they were intended to create a legal obligation.<sup>72</sup>

tamentary instruments, and are variously treated and discussed in the C.J.S. title Wills §§ 602, 831, 845, 1011, also 69 C.J. p 78 note 74-p 79 note 93, p 445 note 35-p 447 note 46, p 471 note 43-p 472 note 49, and p 716 note 56-p 727 note 62.

Precautions against injury required to be exercised within the law of negligence generally are treated in Negligence §§ 84-89; and as required of a municipal corporation with respect to obstructions or defects in its streets see Municipal Corporations §§ 835-838.

PRECEDE. To come first in order of time; to go before in place or order of time.<sup>80</sup>

"Precede" has been contrasted with "ensue" see 30 C.J.S. p 257 note 31.

"Preexisting debt" defined see 26 C. J.S. p 12 note 47.

PREFECT. A governor, commander, chief magistrate, or superintendent.<sup>25</sup>

PREFER. Bring in or offer; also, carry on.<sup>26</sup>

Preferred. A relative word, referring to something else, and meaning that the thing to which it is attached, whatever that may be, has some advantage over another thing of the same character, which but for this advantage would be like the other.<sup>27</sup>

PREFERENCE. In a general sense, the act of preferring one thing above another;<sup>28</sup> choice of one thing rather than another; estimation of one thing more than another;<sup>29</sup> the state of being preferred or chosen before others.<sup>30</sup>

As used with reference to debtor and creditor, the word "preference" contemplates the relation of existing creditors, having equal or similar rights and equities, at the time of the conveyance or transfer, whereby the rights of one are advanced over those of another in the competition for assets.<sup>31</sup> In this connection the term is defined as meaning the right which a creditor has over others to be paid first out of the assets of his debtor;<sup>32</sup> an advantage in the payment of a debt due him, acquired by one creditor over other creditors;<sup>33</sup> any advantage given by previous payment to one creditor, to which advantage all the other creditors were not parties;<sup>34</sup> the expression of a motive or desire to favor some creditors over others;<sup>35</sup> the paying or securing to one or more of his creditors by an insolvent debtor the whole or a part of their claim, to the exclusion of the rest;<sup>36</sup> a payment to one creditor which will give or may possibly give him an advantage over others;<sup>37</sup> some advantage over another.<sup>38</sup> It can only arise by reason of some statutory provision or some fixed principle of common law which creates a special, superior right in certain creditors over others.<sup>39</sup>

"Preference" has been distinguished from "preferred claim" see 14 C.J.S. p 1189 note 9.1.

Preferences where the debtor-creditor relationship exists are treated in various titles throughout this work, particular reference being made to the indexes to the titles Assignments for the Benefit of Creditors, Bankruptcy, Banks and Banking, Corporations, Fraudulent Conveyances, and Insolvency. For other references to the use of the term in this connection see the Descriptive-Word Index.

Under constitutional and statutory provisions preference in appointment to public offices, positions, and employments is frequently given to honorably discharged members of the armed forces, and such provisions are treated generally in Officers § 35, and more specifically in Municipal Corporations, see the index to this title sub verbo "Veterans." Provisions against discharge of veterans from public service are treated in the C.J.S. titles States § 78, also 59 C.J. p 140 notes 4-7, and United States § 63, also 65 C.J. p 1298 notes 10-15.

Unknowingly entertained

"It is often not known to be held by the person entertaining such prejudice; that is to say, one may have a prejudiced state of mind upon a subject against an idea, cause or person, and be wholly unconscious that he had any prejudice. In fact, upon casual thought, we are aware that many persons are prejudiced upon public questions, in matters of politics or religion, or on many other subjects, and by reason of such prejudice incapable of giving a dispassionate consideration to such question, and at the same time be totally unconscious that he is prejudiced, and would be quick to repudiate a suggestion that his state of mind is other than fair and open."—Castleberry v. Jones, 99 P.2d 174, 179, 68 Okl.Cr. 414—Lee v. State, 92 P.2d 591, 593, 66 Okl.Cr. 351—State v. Parks, 239 P. 941, 942, 32 Okl.Cr. 61.

is well understood by all persons of ordinary intelligence.<sup>56</sup> While the popular meaning of the word involves some grudge or ill will, as well as a preconceived opinion,<sup>57</sup> the term does not necessarily signify an enmity or ill will against a person.<sup>58</sup>

As a noun, "prejudice" is defined as meaning a bias<sup>59</sup> or leaning toward one side or the other of a question from considerations other than those belonging to it;<sup>60</sup> an unreasonable predilection or prepossession for or against anything, especially an opinion or leaning adverse to anything, formed without proper grounds or before suitable knowledge;<sup>61</sup> an opinion or judgment formed beforehand, or without due examination;<sup>62</sup> an opinion or decision of mind formed without due examination;<sup>63</sup> a prejudgment;<sup>64</sup> prepossession.<sup>65</sup> "Prejudice" also means to the injury or detriment of another;<sup>66</sup> but it is only detriment resulting from unfair judgment which constitutes legal prejudice.<sup>67</sup>

As a verb, the word "prejudice" is defined as meaning to injure or damage by some judgment or action; to cause injury to; hence, generally, to hurt; damage; injure; impair;<sup>68</sup> to cause any harm or damage or loss to;<sup>69</sup> to bias the mind by hasty and incorrect notions, and give it an unreasonable bent to one side or other of a cause; to prepossess with unexamined opinions, or opinions formed without due knowledge of the facts and circumstances attending the question.<sup>70</sup>

"Prejudice" as a noun has been held synonymous with "prejudgment" see ante note 50, and has been distinguished from "bias" see 10 C.J.S. p 354 note 72; and as a verb has been held substantially similar to "defraud" see 26 C.J.S. p 683 note 12.1.

In law, prejudice is a bias on the part of judge, jury, or witness, which interferes with fairness of judgment.<sup>71</sup>

"Prejudice" is discussed and treated in various connections throughout this work, particular reference being made to the indexes to the titles Arbitration and Award, Criminal Law, Equity, Judges, and Juries. For other particular applications and specific uses of the term consult the Descriptive-Word Index.

PREJUDICIAL. The word "prejudicial" in its broad sense signifies tending to injure or impair, and in its restricted sense signifies being blinded by bias.<sup>72</sup> It may mean merely derogatory, or it may mean actually or naturally and probably bringing about a wrong result.<sup>73</sup> "Prejudicial" is defined as meaning disadvantageous;<sup>74</sup> harmful;<sup>75</sup> hurt-

"Premeditation" is also defined as meaning to think beforehand;<sup>14</sup> thought of beforehand<sup>15</sup> for any,<sup>16</sup> or some,<sup>17</sup> length of time, however short.

Premeditation is nothing more or less than a mental process, a series of mental attitudes,<sup>18</sup> and does not involve a constant purpose for a definite length of time.<sup>19</sup> No particular time is required for the mental process of premeditation,<sup>20</sup> and the intention to do the act need not have existed for any particular length of time before the act,<sup>21</sup> and it is as much premeditation if the intent entered into the mind of the guilty agent a moment before the act as though it entered the mind a considerable period of time before.<sup>22</sup>

Premeditation is where the intention to do the act has been formed before the attempt to execute it.<sup>23</sup>

"Premeditation" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "aforethought" see 2 C.J.S. p 1007 note 32. "Premeditation" and "deliberation" have been held synonymous, and the terms have also been distinguished, see 26 C.J.S. p 692 notes 24, 25.

"Premeditation" as an element of murder in the first degree is defined and discussed in Homicide § 33. For other specific references consult the Descriptive-Word Index.

PREMISES. The word "premises" has various meanings depending on the subject matter in connection with which it is used.<sup>24</sup> It has no fixed legal significance,<sup>25</sup> and no definition applicable to every situation.<sup>26</sup>

The word has two entirely different meanings, and in popular usage signifies lands and tenements, and in this sense is defined in the C.J.S. title Property

§ 7, also 49 C.J. p 1328 note 9—p 1329 note 21. The term is also treated in its popular sense, as denoting lands and tenements, in Deeds § 22 b and in the C.J.S. title Workmen's Compensation Acts § 231, also 49 C.J. p 1329 notes 23, 24. See also the index to the title Landlord and Tenant and the Descriptive-Word Index.

In what has been said to be its primary sense,<sup>27</sup> the word "premises" is defined as meaning that which has been before mentioned;<sup>28</sup> matters previously stated or set forth;<sup>29</sup> statements previously made;<sup>30</sup> the foregoing statements;<sup>31</sup> that which has gone before;<sup>32</sup> that which is before;<sup>33</sup> that which precedes;<sup>34</sup> that which is put before;<sup>35</sup> that which is placed first; that which is sent before;<sup>36</sup> introduction.<sup>37</sup>

When used in its primary sense in a document or written instrument, ordinarily there can be no uncertainty with respect to the meaning of the word "premises,"<sup>38</sup> for in this sense the term implies a reference to previous matter contained therein<sup>39</sup> and concerning which something is proposed.<sup>40</sup>

When used in various other connections in written instruments, however, its exact meaning must be determined according to the intention of the parties as ascertained from the instrument, and the facts and circumstances attending its making.<sup>41</sup>

The stating part of a bill in equity is sometimes called the "premises," and is an essential part of the bill, as stated in Equity § 210.

In logic, "premises" is defined as meaning the two introductory propositions of a syllogism from which the conclusion is deduced.<sup>42</sup>

"Premium" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "commission" see 15 C.J.S. p 582 note 16; and has been compared with or distinguished from "gross income" see 38 C.J.S. p 1082 note 63. "Premium" and "assessment" have been held synony-

Prerogatives direct or incidental

"Prerogatives are either direct or incidental. The direct are such positive substantial parts of the royal character and authority as are rooted in and spring from the king's political person, considered merely by itself, without reference to any other extrinsic circumstance; as, the right of sending ambassadors, of creating peers, and of making war or peace. But such prerogatives as are incidental bear always a relation to something else, distinct from the king's person; and are indeed only exceptions, in favour of the crown, to those general rules that are established for the rest of the community; such as, that no costs shall be recovered against the king; that the king can never be a joint tenant; and that his debts shall be preferred before a debt to any of his subjects."—U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Bramwell, supra.

else, and which, from their very nature, are essential to the welfare of the people of the state, have been adopted, and the common-law rules by which these rights were established have become the law in the United States.<sup>78</sup>

The word "prerogative" signifies a reservation or exception to the general course of law in favor of the public or for the public good, for the protection of the public revenue, and essential to the sustenance of the public burdens and the discharge of the public debts.<sup>79</sup> It is an arbitrary power vested in the executive, a power or will which is discretionary and uncontrolled;<sup>80</sup> and with respect to the governmental problems of a free people the expression is apt only when it is used to mean the inherent and paramount power of the people.<sup>81</sup>

PREROGATIVE WRITS. Writs which do not issue as of right, but in the sound discretion of the court or judge;<sup>82</sup> writs which issue on some extraordinary occasion, and for which it is necessary to apply by motion to the court.<sup>83</sup> Such writs are remedies of an extraordinary kind, granted by courts in certain cases, but never as a matter of right, they being a direct intervention of the government with the liberty or property of the subject.<sup>84</sup> At a remote date in England these writs were issued by the exercise of the royal prerogative,<sup>85</sup> and they are sometimes called "high prerogative writs."<sup>86</sup> Such writs as certiorari, habeas corpus, injunction, mandamus, ne exeat, procedendo, prohibition, and quo warranto are generally,<sup>87</sup> although not always,<sup>88</sup> considered to be prerogative writs. In some jurisdictions, by reason of statutory or constitutional provisions, the prerogative writs are abolished.<sup>89</sup>

PRES. As an abbreviation for "president" see 1 C.J.S. p 276 note 5.

PRESBYOPIA. Long-sightedness and impairment of vision due to loss of accommodation of the eye in advancing years.<sup>90</sup>

PRESCRIBE. A strong word,<sup>91</sup> having a very definite and a very limited meaning.<sup>92</sup> The term is not so narrow as to be confined to a positive order, since it also carries the meaning of limitation or restriction.<sup>93</sup>

"Prescribe" is variously defined as meaning to lay down authoritatively, as a guide, direction, or rule of action.<sup>94</sup> "Prescribe" is further defined as

PREScription. In law prescription is of two kinds; it is either an instrument for the acquisition of property or an instrument of an exemption only from the servitude of judicial process.<sup>15</sup> In the first sense, as relating to the acquisition of property, prescription is treated in Adverse Possession § 2. In the second sense, as relating to exemption from the servitude of judicial process, prescription is treated in Limitations of Actions § 1 b (2) (a).

PREscriptio NON DATUR IN BONA FELO-RUM, NISI PER RECORDUM. See 49 C.J. p 1336 note 61.

PREsence. A term derived from "præ" and "ens."<sup>16</sup> It is not a technical term or a scientific word,<sup>17</sup> but, standing alone without qualifier or adjective,<sup>18</sup> is rather indefinite in its signification,<sup>19</sup> although it may be somewhat explained by contrasting it with its opposite, "absence."<sup>20</sup> Its meaning depends on the circumstances of each particular case.<sup>21</sup> The term implies an area which has no metes and bounds,<sup>22</sup> although it indicates that some person or thing is within view;<sup>23</sup> and thus proximity and consciousness may create "presence."<sup>24</sup>

The word "presence" is defined as meaning the act, fact, or state of being present, or of being in a certain place and not elsewhere, or being within sight or call, at hand, or in some place which is being thought of;<sup>25</sup> immediate nearness or vicinity of one; proximity.<sup>26</sup> "Presence" is further defined as meaning in view;<sup>27</sup> in company with, in the same room with;<sup>28</sup> in a situation face to face with some person or persons;<sup>29</sup> before; in front of;<sup>30</sup> attendance.<sup>31</sup>

It is also defined as meaning the part of space within one's ken, call, influence, etc.<sup>32</sup>

"Presence" has been distinguished from "absence" see 1 C.J.S. p 350 note 52.1, "absent" see 1 C.J.S. p 351 note 88.1, and "view."<sup>33</sup>

Authority to arrest without a warrant for a crime committed in the presence of an officer see Arrest § 5 b; and presence of accused at the trial of a criminal action see Criminal Law §§ 973-976. The necessity for the presence of a foreign corporation within a state as a prerequisite to a suit in personam against it is discussed in Corporations § 1919. PRESENT. As a noun, the word "present" has several meanings, and in one sense it literally means a gift;<sup>36</sup> an act of kindness courtesy, or respect, contributing to the pleasure of the receiver.<sup>37</sup> In this sense it has been compared with, or distinguished from, "donation" see 28 C.J.S. p 54 note 90, and "gift" see Gifts § 5.

In a different sense it means time now passing.<sup>38</sup>

As a verb, "present" is defined as meaning to lay before, or submit to, a person or body for consideration or action;<sup>39</sup> as to present a memorial, petition, or indictment;<sup>40</sup> to submit, as a petition, remonstrance, etc., for a decision or settlement to the proper authorities;<sup>41</sup> to offer for judicial action or inquiry;<sup>42</sup> to hand to and leave with;<sup>43</sup> to deliver up; to give official notice of;<sup>44</sup> to file;<sup>45</sup> to represent; to show.<sup>46</sup>

The verb "to present" has been held synonymous with "file" see 36 C.J.S. p 752 note 71, and "indicate" see 42 C.J.S. p 823 note 8.

As an adjective, "present" is defined as meaning being in view or immediately at hand;<sup>47</sup> being within reach, sight or call;<sup>48</sup> being in a certain place and not elsewhere;<sup>49</sup> ready at need.<sup>50</sup>

"Present," it has been said, in none of its applications, is synonymous, under any circumstances, with "resident."<sup>51</sup>

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.<sup>52</sup>

PRESENTATION. A word having many different significations, as the context or the circumstances in which it is used may require.<sup>53</sup> It indicates something more than a mere delivery, or placing in the legal possession of the presentee the thing presented, and in order to constitute a presentation there must be not only a delivery, but also a formal exhibition of the thing presented, so that with full knowledge it may be accepted or rejected.<sup>54</sup>

"Presentation" is defined as meaning the act of presenting, or state of being presented; that which is presented;<sup>55</sup> a disclosure for approval or rejection;<sup>56</sup> delivering up; showing.<sup>57</sup>

to affirm a thing to be true, without proof;<sup>12</sup> to infer;<sup>13</sup> to venture, go, or act by an assumption of leave or authority not granted.<sup>14</sup> Also, to go beyond what is warranted by the circumstances of the case.<sup>15</sup>

Presumed means taken for granted without proof.<sup>16</sup> It has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "deemed" see 26 C.J.S. p 660 note 42, and distinguished from "inferred" see 43 C.J.S. p 373 note 31.

PRESUMPTIO JURIS ET DE JURE. See ante p 474 note 36.

PRESUMPTION. The term is defined in Criminal Law § 579 and in Evidence § 114. For other references consult the indexes to these titles and the Descriptive-Word Index.

PRESUMPTIVE. Based on presumption or probability; probable.<sup>17</sup>

PRESUMPTIVELY. By previous supposition.<sup>18</sup>

PRESUNCIÓN. In Spanish law, presumption which may be either of law (presunción de derecho) or of fact (presunción de hombre) which may be violent (violente or vehemente), probable or medium, or light.<sup>19</sup>

PRESUPPOSE. To imply or involve as a necessary condition; require as antecedently true; cause to be taken for granted.<sup>20</sup> It has been said that the word "presupposes" is as often used in the cases as is the word "implies,"<sup>21</sup> and the two terms are considered as synonymous see 42 C.J.S. p 406 note 34.1.

PRETEND. In earlier times the word "pretend" had a broader meaning than it has at present, and signified, among other things, to profess to have; to make profession of (some quality or skill); and it also was used in the sense of to claim, to profess, to undertake; but this meaning has been greatly narrowed in the course of time, and there now is involved in the word an element of intentional falsity.<sup>22</sup> It is now defined as meaning to hold as true that which is false; to feign; to simulate.<sup>23</sup>

"Pretend" has been held synonymous with "assume" see 7 C.J.S. p 105 note 25.

"Pretended" has been distinguished from "actual" see 1 C.J.S. p 1433 note 64.

PRETENSE or PRETENCE. A holding out, or offering to others something false and feigned;<sup>31</sup> a ruse or wile masking ulterior design;<sup>32</sup> a show, or a holding forth in form, of something which does not, in fact, exist;<sup>33</sup> that which is advanced or displayed for the purpose of concealing the reality.<sup>34</sup> signifying to come before, to precede;<sup>60</sup> and it has been said that this was the original meaning of the word in English.<sup>61</sup> The term is defined as meaning to go before;<sup>62</sup> to precede; to be beforehand with; to get the start of; to anticipate; to forestall;<sup>63</sup> but it has been said that these meanings are obsolete.<sup>64</sup>

While it has been said that all the meanings of the term "prevent" are anticipative,<sup>78</sup> it has also been stated that, when used in its original sense of anticipation, to "prevent" nearly always suggests that someone is the object of prevention; but, when used in the usual modern sense of hindrance or preclusion, the word always means that some other entity is preventing action by the one prevented.<sup>79</sup> The word "prevent" does not necessarily imply physical force,<sup>80</sup> and the common acceptance of the term carries no connotation of permanency.<sup>81</sup>

"Prevent" has been held to be equivalent to, or synonymous with, "hinder" see 40 C.J.S. p 400 note 32. The words "prevent" and "prohibit" are sometimes used indiscriminately and as synonyms to avoid too frequent repetition.<sup>82</sup>

"Prevent" has been compared with, or distinguished from, "dissuade" see 27 C.J.S. p 357 note 71, "hinder" see 40 C.J.S. p 400 note 34, "obstruct" see 67 C.J.S. p 44 note 95, "regulate,"<sup>83</sup> and "resist."<sup>84</sup>

85. Phrases

(1) "Prevent or attempt to prevent" means to anticipate, forestall, to intercept, hinder, frustrate,

PREVENTIVE INJUNCTION. See Injunctions § 4.

PREVIOUS. Being or taking place before something else; antecedent; prior.<sup>86</sup> The word "previous," indicating the concept of time, has been held synonymous with the terms "next preceding" and "next prior to," as discussed in the C.J.S. title Time § 8, also 49 C.J. p 1344 notes 7, 8.

PREVIOUSLY. An adverb of time, used in comparing an act or state named, to another act or state, subsequent in order of time, for the purpose of asserting the priority of the first.<sup>87</sup>

PRICE. The word "price" is variously defined as meaning the amount of money given, or set as the amount that will be given or received, in exchange for anything;<sup>88</sup> the amount at which a commodity is valued or sold in the market;<sup>89</sup> a consideration in current money given for the purchase of the thing sold;<sup>90</sup> the consideration demanded or received in connection with the sale of a commodity;<sup>91</sup> the consideration in money given for the purchase of a thing;<sup>92</sup> the sum stipulated as the equivalent of the thing sold, and also every incident taken into consideration for the fixing of the price put to the debit of the vendee, and agreed to by him;<sup>93</sup> something which one ordinarily accepts voluntarily in exchange for something else;<sup>94</sup> the sum in money or other equivalent set on an article by the seller, which he demands for it;<sup>95</sup> the sum or amount of money, or its equivalent, which a seller asks or obtains for his goods in market;<sup>96</sup> the sum for which a thing is bought or sold, or offered for sale;<sup>97</sup> the sum of money which an article is sold for.<sup>98</sup>

While it has been said that "price" does not simply mean value or cost,<sup>99</sup> the word "price" has been defined as meaning the market value;<sup>1</sup> the value which the seller places on his goods for sale;<sup>2</sup> the cost to the buyer;<sup>3</sup> the amount paid by the purchaser.<sup>4</sup> It is further defined as meaning the market price;<sup>5</sup> the sum actually given for an article;<sup>6</sup> the sum which a seller will receive in exchange;<sup>7</sup> an exchangeable value of a commodity;<sup>8</sup> a recompense.<sup>9</sup>

"Price" implies value, usually in money,<sup>10</sup> and in common usage "price" is understood to mean money,<sup>11</sup> although this is not always so,<sup>12</sup> and it does not necessarily mean value in money; it may mean money or some other equivalent.<sup>13</sup>

thwart, to keep from happening.—Ex parte Frye, 156 S.W.2d 531, 535, 143 Tex.Cr. 9.

12. N.D.—Embsden State Bank v. Boyle, supra.

49 C.J. p 1345 note 53.

"Price" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "compensation" see 15 C.J.S. p 655 note 44, and "sum,"<sup>14</sup> and has been compared with, or distinguished from, "consideration" see 15 C.J.S. p 986 note 63.1, and "value."<sup>15</sup>

The regulation, fixing, or control of prices is treated in various places throughout this work, and particularly in the title Monopolies, reference being made to the index to that title. The subject is also treated in Constitutional Law §§ 169, 209, and in the C.J.S. title War § 20, also 67 C.J. p 367 note 8-p 372 note 27.

Phrases employing the word "price" are set out in the note,<sup>16</sup> and for additional phrases as to which more recent adjudications have not been found see 49 C.J. p 1346 notes 64-85.

PRICKERS. The term applied to the frayed and broken wire strands of a metal cable.<sup>17</sup>

Not necessarily synonymous

"Price and value are not necessarily synonymous. Price is determined by short term factors and by the caprices of the market. Value on the other hand is dependent upon long term factors and is directly related to the intrinsic worth of the property that resists the impact of temporary and abnormal conditions. Neither price nor value can be determined by mathematical calculations, and value, even more than price, is a matter of judgment reached after a full consideration of all the relevant elements that may conceivably affect it."—State ex rel. Buck v. Rapp, 36 N.Y.S.2d 790, 796.

16. Purchase price

(1) The consideration paid or agreed to be paid on the passing of the title to property in its entirety. —South Texas Lumber Co. v. Epps, 150 P. 164, 165, 48 Okl. 372.

(2) The price agreed on by the parties as a consideration for which the property is sold and purchased. —Byrd v. Babin, 200 So. 294, 300, 196 La. 902.

(3) It is commonly understood to mean money, although this is not always so.—Embsden State Bank v. Boyle, 196 N.W. 320, 321, 50 N.D. 573.

Wholesale price

(1) The term "wholesale price"

has a fixed, certain, and well-defined meaning in the mercantile world, and means the price fixed on merchandise by one who buys in large quantities of the same producer or manufacturer, and who sells the same to jobbers or to retail dealers. —Fawcner v. Lew Smith Wall Paper Co., 55 N.W. 200, 201, 88 Iowa 169, 45 Am.S.R. 230.

(2) There is a difference between the terms "wholesale price" and "wholesale cost," although the two terms are often used interchangeably.—J. W. Finn & Co. v. Culberhouse, 150 S.W. 698, 700, 105 Ark. 197.

46. D.C.—Agnew v. Board of Governors of Federal Reserve System,

The word "primary" is variously defined as meaning first in time;<sup>47</sup> in the first order of time;<sup>48</sup> first in order of time or development;<sup>49</sup> or in intention;<sup>50</sup> original;<sup>51</sup> first in origin, time, thought, or intention;<sup>52</sup> first in order.<sup>53</sup>

"Primary" is further defined as meaning first in rank, dignity, or importance;<sup>54</sup> principal;<sup>55</sup> chief;<sup>56</sup> first in order of advancement;<sup>57</sup> first in the order of development;<sup>58</sup> fundamental;<sup>59</sup> primitive.<sup>60</sup>

"Primary," when applied to a single subject often means first, chief, or principal,<sup>61</sup> but that is not always the case, and an activity or function may be primary if it is substantial.<sup>62</sup> "Primary" is not restricted to the singular; it may refer to the plural.<sup>63</sup>

It also means preparatory<sup>64</sup> or preliminary to something higher.<sup>65</sup>

The synonyms of "primary" are "prime" and "primeval,"<sup>66</sup> and the antonyms are "lesser" see 52 C.J.S. p 1052 note 36, and "secondary."<sup>67</sup>

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note,<sup>68</sup> and for additional phrases as to which more recent adjudications have not been found see 49 C.J. p 1348 notes 62-70.

Distinction noted

"It is true, as the Board says in its brief, that some dictionaries give 'fundamental' as a meaning of 'primary,' and some also give 'essential,' which, however, the Board does not mention. But these words are not synonyms of 'primary,' and they overlap in meaning only when the implication of 'fundamental' or 'essential' is 'first' or 'principal.' Other meanings of 'fundamental' and 'essential' cannot be ascribed to 'primary' merely because the words are in part analogous. Certainly those words, in meanings other than 'principal,' are not apt as descriptive of business activity."—Agnew v. PRIME. The word "prime" has a variety of significations and is defined as meaning first in order of time; original; primary; first in rank, degree, dignity, authority, or importance.<sup>69</sup> It has been held to be a synonym of "primary" see ante p 501 note 66.

PRIMEVAL. Belonging to the first ages; primitive in time; primal; pristine.<sup>70</sup> It has been held to be a synonym of "primary" see ante p 501 note 66.

PRIMO; PRIMUS. As the first words of maxims as to which there have been no recent applications see 49 C.J. p 1348 notes 91, 95.

PRIMOGENITURA. In Spanish law, the right or prerogative of the first-born son.<sup>71</sup>

PRIMOGENITURE. The state of being the first born among several children of the same parents; seniority by birth in the same family; the superior or exclusive right possessed by the eldest son, and particularly his right to succeed to the estate of his ancestor, in right of his seniority by birth, to the exclusion of younger sons.<sup>72</sup>

PRINCE. In the general acceptance of the term according to authorities, "prince," when applied in the law of nations, signifies a sovereign, a king, emperor, or ruler; one to whom power is delegated or vested.<sup>73</sup>

PRINCEPS. As the first word of maxims as to which there have been no recent applications see 49 C.J. p 1348 notes 97, 98.

PRINCIPAL. As a noun the word "principal" has two different meanings. In one sense, and in what has been said to be its original signification, it means a sum or fund which is producing interest;<sup>74</sup> a sum of money placed at interest, or employed as a fund as distinguished from its income or profits.<sup>75</sup> In this sense the word has no strict legal meaning, but it involves the loose general idea of a source of income.<sup>76</sup> Ordinarily the term conveys no idea of land or any right therein,<sup>77</sup> and it does not include real property.<sup>78</sup> The word "principal" is frequently employed in this sense in testamentary dispositions of property, and the construction that is placed on the term when so used is discussed in the C.J.S. title Wills § 759, also 69 C.J. p 376 note 64, and 49 C.J. p 1349 note 2 [a]. In this sense, "principal" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "capital" see 12 C.J.S. p 1124 note 95, "corpus" see 20 C.J.S. p 235 note 18, and "face" see 35 C.J.S. p 382 note 70, and it has been compared with, or distinguished from, "income" see 42 C.J.S. p 535 note 41, and "interest" see Interest § 1.

In an entirely different sense the noun "principal" is employed to denote a person, and in this sense the term is treated in many places throughout this work. On the civil side of the law the word "principal" is applied to the person whom the agent represents and from whom he derives his authority as stated in Agency § 1 b. The word "principal" is defined in Principal and Surety § 3 as the person on whom the primary obligation rests, and in the C.J.S. title Schools and School Districts § 154, the word "principal" is defined as meaning a teacher intrusted with special duties of direction and management. On the criminal side of the law the term "principal" is applied to one who actually perpetrates the crime or who, being actually or constructively present, aids and abets its commission as stated in Criminal Law § 81 a.

As an adjective the word "principal" is defined as meaning chief;<sup>79</sup> highest in rank, authority,

Prime mover

(1) An initial source of motive power, as an engine or machine, the object of which is to receive and modify force and motion as supplied by some natural source, and apply them to drive other machinery, as a water-wheel, a water-pressure engine, a windmill, a turbine, a tidal motor, a steam engine, or other heat engine. The internal combustion gas engine is a prime mover which converts heat energy, contained in the natural gas as fuel, into mechanical energy, then supplied to and used by the compressor unit.—Coverdale v. Arkansas-Louisiana Pipe Line Co., La., 58 S.Ct. 736, 738, 303 U.S. 604,

82 L.Ed. 1043—Bowles v. Ammon, D. C.Neb., 61 F.Supp. 106, 109.

(2) All internal combustion engines are classified as prime movers.—Bowles v. Ammon, supra.

I. IN GENERAL

§ 1. Nature of Relationship

The relationship of principal and surety, or suretyship, in its broadest sense, is the relationship occupied by a person liable for the payment of money or for the performance of an act by another, such liability being collateral as to such person, and who is liable to suffer loss in the event of the failure of such other person to pay or perform, but whose liability is terminated at once, fully and completely, if such other person does pay or perform.

The relationship of principal and surety, or suretyship, in its broadest sense, is the relationship

occupied by a person liable for the payment of money or for the performance of an act by another, such liability being collateral as to such person, and who is liable to suffer loss in the event of the failure of such other person to pay or perform, but whose liability is terminated at once, fully and completely, if such other person does pay or perform.<sup>1</sup> Suretyship is a lending of credit to aid a principal who has insufficient credit of his own,<sup>2</sup> and is a direct contract to pay the principal's debt or perform his obligation in case of his default,<sup>3</sup>

1. Tex.—Lubbock First Nat. Bank v. Alexander, Civ.App., 4 S.W.2d 298, 300.

Other statements of relationship

(1) "Suretyship" exists where one person has undertaken an obligation and another person is also under an obligation or other duty to obligee, who is entitled to but one performance, and as between two persons bound, one of them, rather than the other, should perform.

Pa.—National Surety Corp. v. Nulton, 55 Pa.Dist. & Co. 149.

Wis.—State Bank of Mt. Horeb v. Banking Commission, 2 N.W.2d 363, 366, 240 Wis. 189.

(2) The suretyship relation arises where two persons are under obligation to the same obligee who is entitled to but one performance as between the two who are bound, and the obligor ultimately responsible for the debt is the principal debtor while the other is the surety.—Everts v. Matteson, 132 P.2d 476, 21 Cal.2d 437.

(3) Additional statement.—Scandinavian-American Bank of Fargo v. Westby, 172 N.W. 665, 670, 41 N.D. 276.

Surety of subcontractor

In contractor's action against surety of subcontractors who had undertaken to perform contractor's agreement with state, surety occupied same position toward contractor as contractor's surety occupied toward state.—Federal Surety Co. v. White, 295 P. 281, 88 Colo. 238.

Contract uberrimæ fides

Suretyship contract is contract uberrimæ fides, especially where it is purely voluntary.—First Citizens Bank & Trust Co. of Utica v. Sherman's Estate, 294 N.Y.S. 131, 250 App.Div. 339.

2. Ala.—Rollings v. Gunter, 101 So. 446, 211 A. 671.

50 C.J. p 12 note 4.

Similar statements

(1) Suretyship is an accessory promise by which a person binds himself for another already bound, and agrees with the creditor to satisfy the obligation if the debtor does not.—Continental & Commercial Nat. Bank of Chicago v. Cobb, Mass., 200 F. 511, 516, 118 C.C.A. 615.

(2) Suretyship is obligation to pay if primary debtor fails to do so according to contract to which both although the surety's obligation is accessorial to that of the principal debtor.<sup>4</sup>

Contract of suretyship in a broad sense is one whereby one person binds himself to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another.<sup>5</sup> In a narrower legal sense, however, it is a contract whereby one person obligates himself, in consideration of credit or indulgence or other benefit given to his principal, to be answerable for the debt or obligation of such principal, who is primarily responsible therefor, in case of the latter's default, the principal also remaining liable therefor, and the surety becoming bound as the principal or original debtor is bound, and in some jurisdictions this definition, in effect, is given by statute.<sup>6</sup> Under a contract of suretyship the obligee or creditor is not under the necessity of seeing that the principal performs his conditions, since the surety must do so.<sup>7</sup>

Classes. A suretyship is designated as "voluntary" where the chief object of the contract is to become a surety,<sup>8</sup> or as "involuntary," or by operation of law, where the chief object of the contract is to accomplish some purpose other than security, but its effect is to make one of the parties secondarily liable for a debt or for the performance of an act by another.<sup>9</sup> A suretyship may be designated as "personal" where the surety may be made to respond in damages generally for a breach of his contract,<sup>10</sup> or as "real" where certain specific property can be taken to enforce payment of another's debt, or the performance of some duty owing by another and the owner of such property, if he would save it, must pay or perform, but he is not personally liable in damages.<sup>11</sup>

Imputed knowledge. Broadly speaking, the knowledge of the surety is not imputable to the principal;<sup>12</sup> but it has been held that knowledge to the principal is knowledge to the surety.<sup>13</sup>

§ 2. "Surety" Defined

In a broad sense a surety is one who becomes responsible for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, but in a narrower sense, a surety is a person who binds himself for the payment of a sum of money, or for the performance of something else, for another who is already bound for such payment or performance.

In a broad sense a surety is one who becomes responsible for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another.<sup>14</sup> In a narrower sense, however, a surety is a person who binds himself for the payment principal and surety are parties.—Union Indemnity Co. v. Freeman, 133 So. 48, 49, 222 Ala. 479.

(3) Suretyship is an undertaking to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, by which the surety becomes bound as the original debtor is bound.

Del.—W. T. Rawleigh Co. v. Warrington, 199 A. 666, 668, 9 W.W. Harr. 366.

N.C.—Dry v. Reynolds, 172 S.E. 351, 352, 205 N.C. 571.

Obligation to do act

In contracts of suretyship, surety obligates himself to do act if principal fails.—National Surety Co. v. George E. Breece Lumber Co., C.C.A. N.M., 60 F.2d 847.

Terms "surety" and "security" are not synonymous; while the latter term includes the former, the use of the latter is a limitation of the form of the security to that of personal and direct liability on the primary obligation, which is much more simple and preferable.—Cope v. Cope, 5 Tenn.App. 169.

Similar definition

A contract of suretyship is one under which, in consideration of the benefit extended to the principal debtor, one lends his credit by joining in the principal debtor's obligation, so as to render himself directly and primarily responsible with the principal on the same contract and without any reference to the solvency of the principal.—Durham v. Greenwald, 3 S.E.2d 585, 586, 188 Ga. 165—Arkansas Fuel Oil Co. v. Young, 16 S.E.2d 909, 911, 66 Ga. App. 33—Etheridge v. W. T. Rawleigh Co., 116 S.E. 903, 905, 29 Ga. App. 698.

of a sum of money, or for the performance of something else, for another who is already bound for such payment or performance;<sup>15</sup> and in some jurisdictions there are statutory definitions to this effect.<sup>16</sup> A surety has also been defined as a person who, being liable to pay a debt or perform an obligation, is entitled, if it is enforced against him, to be indemnified by some other person, who ought himself to have made payment or performed before the surety was compelled to do so.<sup>17</sup> As between joint makers of a note, some may in fact be sureties for another joint maker.<sup>18</sup>

§ 3. "Principal" Defined

The "principal," as the term is used in the law of principal and surety, is the person on whom the primary obligation rests, and who ordinarily receives the benefit or obtains such benefit for another.

The "principal," as the term is used in the law of principal and surety, is the person on whom the primary obligation rests,<sup>19</sup> and who ordinarily receives the benefit<sup>20</sup> or obtains such benefit for another.<sup>21</sup> The mere fact that one may benefit indirectly by the transaction does not make him a principal.<sup>22</sup> For example, the fact that the principal uses the money to pay a debt owing by him to the surety does not make the latter a principal instead of a surety.<sup>23</sup> On the other hand, although a person apparently undertakes to pay the debt of another, if the debt is in fact his own, he is none the less a principal, as distinguished from a surety.<sup>24</sup> So also, while the relation of suretyship may exist between the principal and surety, if the surety contracts as a principal with the creditor, he may be held as such.<sup>25</sup>

Joint principals. Where two or more jointly borrow money for the benefit of both or either, they may all be principal obligors.<sup>26</sup> In determining which of two signers of an obligation is the principal and which the surety, the reality of the transaction rather than the form of the instrument is controlling,<sup>27</sup> and it has been held that the question is to be determined not by the form of the contract, but by an inquiry as to who received the consideration.<sup>28</sup>

§ 4. "Creditor" or "Obligee" Defined

The "creditor" or "obligee," as the terms are used in the law of principal and surety, is the person who can enforce payment or performance by the principal or surety.

Other definitions

(1) A surety is one who becomes bound simply for the accommodation of his principal and receives no consideration for the favor he bestows.—Trinkle v. Ladoga Bldg. Loan Fund & Savings Ass'n, 117 N. E. 542, 544, 65 Ind.App. 415.

§ 5. Statutory Provisions in General

Statutory provisions concerning the rights and obligations of sureties ordinarily are inapplicable to rights acquired under a contract dated before the enactment of the statute.

A statute concerning the rights and obligations of sureties has been held not applicable to rights acquired under a contract dated before the enactment of such statute.<sup>30</sup> The relation of principal and surety as it existed at the common law may be applicable to negotiable instruments under the Negotiable Instruments Law,<sup>31</sup> although such law does not, in any place, refer to sureties.<sup>32</sup>

II. WHAT LAW GOVERNS

§ 6. In General

Unless it is shown that the parties intended to contract with reference to the law of another jurisdiction, the law of the place where a contract of suretyship is made and to be performed, which is in force at the time of the making of the contract, ordinarily governs.

In accordance with the rules as to the law governing contracts, discussed in Contracts §§ 12-21, and more particularly bonds, discussed in Bonds §§ 5, 6, unless it is shown that the parties intended to contract with reference to the law of another jurisdiction,<sup>33</sup> the law of the place where a contract of suretyship is made and to be performed,<sup>34</sup> which is in force at the time of the making of the contract,<sup>35</sup> ordinarily governs. The law of the place of contract governs although it is signed by the surety<sup>36</sup> or obligee<sup>37</sup> in another jurisdiction, or the surety is a nonresident, temporarily within the jurisdiction when the contract is made,<sup>38</sup> and although the instrument is designed to obtain credit in another jurisdiction, the law of which differs on the subject of suretyship.<sup>39</sup>

§ 7. Creation and Existence of Relationship

The law of the place where a contract of suretyship is made and to be performed ordinarily governs in respect of the validity of the contract.

As a general rule, the law of the place where a contract of suretyship is made and to be performed governs in respect of the validity of the contract.<sup>40</sup>

§ 8. Nature and Extent of Surety's Liability

The law of the place where a contract of suretyship is made and to be performed ordinarily governs as to the rights and liabilities of the surety.

As a general rule, the law of the place where a contract of suretyship is made and to be performed governs as to the rights<sup>41</sup> and liabilities<sup>42</sup> of the surety. Where a surety pleads a discharge as a defense to an action to enforce the obligation, whether the surety has been discharged by any act of the creditor is to be determined by the laws of the state where the action is brought.<sup>43</sup>

III. CREATION AND EXISTENCE OF RELATIONSHIP

§ 9. In General

The relation of suretyship arises from an agreement between the parties, whereby one person becomes liable for another's debt or duty, in which such person has not a direct personal interest and from which he does not receive a benefit.

The relation of suretyship arises from an agreement between the parties,<sup>44</sup> either express or implied, discussed infra §§ 33-41, whereby one person becomes liable for another's debt or duty, in which such person has not a direct personal interest and from which he does not receive a benefit.<sup>45</sup> The relationship is fixed by the arrangement and equities between the debtors or obligors,<sup>46</sup> and may be known to the creditor or obligee, or be wholly unknown to him.<sup>47</sup> If it is unknown to him, his rights are in no manner affected by it;<sup>48</sup> but, if he knows that one party is surety merely, he must, in any subsequent action he may take regarding the debt or obligation, respect the surety's equities, as discussed infra § 32. The fact that a surety has security or that the source of his reimbursement or indemnification is disclosed by the contract does not prevent the existence of a suretyship relation.<sup>49</sup> There is no distinction between a suretyship created with consent of the creditor and that which arises by operation of law.<sup>50</sup>

Suretyship is a tripartite agreement to which there are three indispensable parties, an obligor, a surety, and an obligee; and there can be no true suretyship if any one is lacking.<sup>51</sup> The relationship of principal and surety as applied to individuals necessarily involves separate personalities so that a person cannot be surety for himself.<sup>52</sup>

§ 10. Distinctions

Suretyship has been distinguished from various other relationships.

Suretyship has been distinguished from various other relationships,<sup>53</sup> such as guaranty, discussed in Guaranty § 6, indemnity, in Indemnity § 3, and indorsement of a bill or note, in Bills and Notes §§ 217g, 739. Where the terms of the contract are

§ 11. Duration and Termination of Relationship in General

A surety who desires to terminate the relationship may avail himself of such remedies as are provided by statute.

A surety who desires to terminate the relationship may avail himself of such remedies as are provided by statute.<sup>55</sup> In a proper case, the relationship of principal and surety may be terminated by death of the surety,<sup>56</sup> but the relationship is not terminated by reason of a judgment having been obtained against the principal and surety.<sup>57</sup> Termination and release or discharge of the surety's liability are considered infra §§ 116-244.

§ 12. Evidence of Existence of Relationship

- a. Presumptions
- b. Burden of proof
- c. Admissibility
- d. Weight and sufficiency

a. Presumptions

Where the names of two or more parties to an obligation appear, it will be presumed, unless a different relationship is shown by the language of the writing, that all are principals, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary there is no presumption that any of such parties are sureties; but the presumption that a party is a principal and not a surety may be rebutted by proper evidence.

Where the names of two or more parties to an obligation appear, it will be presumed, unless a different relationship is shown by the language of the writing, that all are principals;<sup>58</sup> and in the absence of evidence to the contrary there generally is no presumption that any of such parties are sureties;<sup>59</sup> nor, if it be known that some are sureties, is there any presumption, from the order of the names, which are sureties.<sup>60</sup> Where, however, one of several signers is known to be the real principal, the others, as between themselves, are prima facie sureties of the principal, and cosureties of each other;<sup>61</sup> and the creditor may be presumed to know that one person is the principal, where such person has obtained all the benefit of the contract,<sup>62</sup> as by receiving all of the money,<sup>63</sup> or where the contract was entered into on account of a debt due from one person only.<sup>64</sup> So it has generally been held that the party who executes a bond is entitled to a presumption that the obligation is secondary, on showing that he became a party at the request of the other party to the obligation, that the consideration moved to the other party, and that such party was the prime mover in the negotiation.<sup>65</sup> It has also been held that the presumption is that one placing his name on the back of a note or other instrument, nonnegotiable, meant thereby to become a surety for the payor.<sup>66</sup>

Rebuttal. The presumption that a party is a principal and not a surety may be rebutted by proper evidence;<sup>67</sup> and, where the names of two or more persons appear to an obligation, any of them may, without alleging fraud or mistake, allege and show that his relationship thereto is only that of surety.<sup>68</sup>

Affixing words "surety" or "security." If the word "surety" or "security" is affixed to some of the names, the presumption is that those are sureties and the others principals,<sup>69</sup> although the use of the word "surety" does not indicate necessarily that the promise is collateral, or that there is another primarily liable.<sup>70</sup>

b. Burden of Proof

The burden of proof ordinarily is on the party asserting it to prove the existence of a suretyship contract; but if the relationship is apparent on the face of the instrument the burden of proof is on one asserting its nonexistence.

In accordance with the general rules as to burden of proof, particularly those relating to the burden of proving the existence of contracts in general, the burden of proof ordinarily is on the party asserting it to prove the existence of a suretyship contract.<sup>71</sup> Thus, where the relationship is not apparent on the face of the instrument, the burden is on a person claiming to contract as surety to prove the fact of suretyship<sup>72</sup> and that the creditor not only knew of that fact but consented to deal with him as surety.<sup>73</sup> On the other hand, if the relationship is apparent on the face of the instrument, the burden of proof is on one asserting its nonexistence.<sup>74</sup> Where acceptance of the contract is presumed, the burden of proving that it was not accepted is on the surety.<sup>75</sup>

If the surety claims that his execution of the contract was induced by fraud, the burden is on him to prove that fact;<sup>76</sup> and, where an apparent surety claims that he signed only as attesting witness, it is incumbent on him to prove that he was induced to sign his name to the instrument as an apparent surety by mistake on his part<sup>77</sup> or by the fraud of the obligee.<sup>78</sup> It has been held that the burden is on the creditor to show his lack of knowledge of fraud of the principal in procuring the surety's signature,<sup>79</sup> but it has also been held that the surety has the burden of proving the obligee's knowledge of, and participation in, the principal's fraud which induced the surety to become such.<sup>80</sup> Where a bond purporting to be signed by the principal is delivered without his signature, the obligee has the burden of showing that the surety consented to such delivery.<sup>81</sup>

General rules as to the admissibility of evidence apply to the admissibility of evidence to prove or disprove the existence of a suretyship contract.

The general rules as to the admissibility of evidence, particularly in respect of the existence of contracts in general, apply to the admissibility of evidence, including circumstantial evidence,<sup>82</sup> to prove or disprove the existence of a suretyship contract,<sup>83</sup> such as on the question of the surety's estoppel to deny his execution of the contract,<sup>84</sup> or of fraud as an inducement to the surety's signature,<sup>85</sup> or to show the true relationship of the parties to the contract.<sup>86</sup> It is competent for the

d. Weight and Sufficiency

The general rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence apply in determining the weight and sufficiency of the evidence as to the existence of the relation of suretyship.

The general rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence, particularly in respect of the existence of contracts generally, apply in determining the weight and sufficiency of the evidence as to the existence of the relation of suretyship,<sup>88</sup> as with respect to proof of execution of the instrument,<sup>89</sup> such as whether or not the surety signed the contract,<sup>90</sup> or whether his signature was induced by fraud,<sup>91</sup> or was executed on condition,<sup>92</sup> or whether or not the contract was illegal<sup>93</sup> or was without consideration.<sup>94</sup>

On the question of duress, a subsequent letter written by the surety, admitting payments on the obligation after removal of duress and asking indulgence, demands an inference that the duress was waived and the contract ratified.<sup>95</sup>

Knowledge of contention

Where owner of lot in which mortgagor had only a leasehold interest conveyed lot to mortgagor so that it could procure a loan, mortgagee's knowledge that mortgagor made payments of rentals to owner after trust deed was executed did not indicate that mortgagee knew or was charged with knowledge that owner contended that he was a surety for loan secured by trust deed with respect to that lot; and evidence as consistent with hypothesis that mortgagee did not have knowledge of arrangement as with hypothesis that it did have knowledge of arrangement was not proof that mortgagee knew that owner contended that he was a surety.—*A. & R. B. NECESSITY, NATURE, AND VALIDITY OF PRINCIPAL'S OBLIGATION

It is essential to the relation of suretyship that there be a principal debtor or obligor and a valid and subsisting debt or obligation for which the principal is responsible.

It is essential to the relation of suretyship that there be a principal debtor or obligor<sup>96</sup> and a valid and subsisting debt or obligation for which the principal is responsible.<sup>97</sup>

§ 14. Nature and Validity in General

The obligation of the principal, for the payment or performance of which the surety undertakes to make himself collaterally liable, must be a valid and binding obligation as between the principal and the creditor or obligee; but under some circumstances the surety may be held liable on an obligation which is not enforceable against the principal.

The obligation of the principal, for the payment or performance of which the surety undertakes to make himself collaterally liable, must be a valid and binding obligation as between the principal and the creditor or obligee.<sup>98</sup> If it is invalid the surety, as a general rule, will not be bound,<sup>99</sup> especially where he had no knowledge of its invalidity at the time he became surety,<sup>1</sup> and even though he believed it to be valid.<sup>2</sup> Under some circumstances, however, the surety may be held liable on an obligation which is not enforceable against the principal.<sup>3</sup> Accordingly, sureties on a bond may be bound although the principal be not bound because the principal named is fictitious.<sup>4</sup> A surety for the performance of a contract is not relieved from liability because the contract was incapable of performance when entered into, where the principal was bound to perform in so far as he was able to, and the obligee would be entitled to some damages for nonperformance.<sup>5</sup>

§ 15. Requirements of Statute

The fact that the bond or obligation of the principal is not in the form required by law will not affect the liability of the surety unless such failure to comply with the statutory requirements actually invalidates the obligation of the principal.

The fact that the bond or obligation of the principal is not in the form required by law will not affect the liability of the surety<sup>6</sup> or constitute a defense in an action against him for a breach thereof<sup>7</sup> unless such failure to comply with the statutory requirements actually invalidates the obligation of the principal.<sup>8</sup>

§ 16. Incapacity or Disqualification of Principal

In the absence of fraud a surety is bound, although the contract is not enforceable against the principal by reason of his lack of capacity or qualification to enter into it.

The general rule that a contract void as to the principal is also void as to the surety, discussed for the son, demands an inference that at the time of such payment he knew of the son's innocence and the duress was removed.—Augusta Motor Sales Co. v. King, supra.

Liability of two parties.

The essence of a contract of suretyship is the existence of someone liable as principal, necessarily contemplating that there must be at least two parties liable for payment of obligation, the principal and the surety.—*Meeks v. supra § 14, does not apply where a person sui generis becomes surety for a person incapable of contracting.<sup>9</sup> In such cases, in the absence of fraud, the surety is bound, although the contract is not enforceable against the principal by reason of his lack of capacity or qualification to enter into it.<sup>10</sup> In other words, the surety's contract is an implied admission of the principal's capacity; and this is true as to the capacity of an individual<sup>11</sup> and as to the authority of an officer of a corporation principal.<sup>12</sup> Accordingly a surety for an infant principal is bound<sup>13</sup> unless the infant principal disaffirms his contract on attaining majority;<sup>14</sup> but even in such a case the surety remains liable if the creditor is not placed in statu quo by a return of the consideration.<sup>15</sup> So, also, a surety is liable, although the contract is invalid as to the principal because the principal is a married woman<sup>16</sup> or an insane person.<sup>17</sup>

§ 17. Duress and Undue Influence

Duress exercised on the principal ordinarily will not avoid the obligation of a surety unless the surety at the time of executing the obligation was ignorant of such duress.

In accordance with the general rule, discussed in Contracts § 179, that duress affecting the validity of a contract can be taken advantage of as a defense only by the person on whom the duress was exercised, duress exercised on the principal will not avoid the obligation of a surety<sup>18</sup> unless the surety, at the time of executing the obligation, is ignorant of the duress which renders it voidable by the principal;<sup>19</sup> and knowledge of the fact of the principal's imprisonment does not necessarily involve knowledge of its want of legality for duress.<sup>20</sup> By way of exception to the general rule, a surety may avoid the obligation on the ground of duress where it is extorted from the principal in violation of a statute,<sup>21</sup> or where the relationship between the principal and surety, such as father and son or husband and wife, is so intimate that the duress on the principal is supposed to operate with equal force on the surety.<sup>22</sup>

§ 18. Forgery

The forgery of the names of one or more of several obligors to an obligation does not release a surety thereon, if the obligee accepts the instrument without notice of the forgery.

The forgery of the names of one or more of several obligors to a bond or note does not release a surety thereon, if the obligee accepts the instrument without notice of the forgery.<sup>23</sup>

§ 19. Fraud

Generally, if the principal is not bound by the contract owing to fraud practiced on him by the creditor, the surety likewise is not bound; but unless the principal avails himself of the fraud in avoidance of the contract the surety cannot take advantage of it.

As a general rule, if the principal is not bound by the contract owing to fraud practiced on him by the creditor, the surety likewise is not bound;<sup>24</sup> and the fact that the principal brought an action in disaffirmance of, and legally rescinded, the contract in the state wherein the contract was to be performed is available to the surety, although the principal had not reduced the rescission of the contract to judgment.<sup>25</sup> Unless, however, the principal avails himself of the fraud in avoidance of the contract the surety cannot take advantage of it.<sup>26</sup> A misrepresentation made to the principal, which is insufficient to discharge him, will not avail the surety.<sup>27</sup> If a surety changes his position to that of creditor, by executing his own note to the payee and taking up the original note, he cannot defeat a recovery on the new note by setting up fraud on the principal in the original note.<sup>28</sup>

Fraud of principal. A surety is not released from liability by the fraud of his principal in securing the execution of a contract for the performance of which the surety renders himself liable, where the creditor has no notice of such fraud, actual or constructive.<sup>29</sup>

§ 20. Illegality

The obligation of a surety is not binding on him where the entire contract between the primary parties out of which it springs is affected by positive illegalities of which he is ignorant, or where it is based on an illegal consideration.

The obligation of a surety is not binding on him where the entire contract between the primary parties out of which it springs is affected by positive illegalities<sup>30</sup> of which he is ignorant,<sup>31</sup> or where it is based on an illegal consideration.<sup>32</sup> The surety may set up the illegality of the contract, although the principal may not be in a position to urge the same defense;<sup>33</sup> nor is he estopped to set up such defense by the fact that the creditor was induced to enter into the contract and part with his money by reason of the surety's becoming such.<sup>34</sup>

In accordance with the foregoing rules, a suretyship contract is void, and the surety not liable thereon, where it is given to defraud the creditors of the principal,<sup>35</sup> or for the payment of rent of property leased for illegal purposes,<sup>36</sup> unless the lessor is without actual knowledge of such unlawful use.<sup>37</sup> So also, a surety is not bound by the principal's obligation given to compound a crime,<sup>38</sup> although he may be bound where the security is given merely for the repayment of money stolen or embezzled,<sup>39</sup> and there is no agreement committing the payee to concealment or to otherwise shirk the duty to punish the crime.<sup>40</sup>

§ 21. — Collateral Transaction

If the principal's obligation itself is not illegal, the surety's liability is not affected by collateral or incidental acts of illegality on the part of the principal or of the obligee.

Where the principal's obligation itself is not illegal, the surety's liability is not affected by collateral or incidental acts of illegality on the part of the principal<sup>41</sup> or of the obligee.<sup>42</sup> Thus sureties for a contractor cannot set up as a defense that he employed aliens in violation of the law.<sup>43</sup>

§ 22. Ultra Vires Contracts

A surety on a bond by or to a corporation is liable thereon, although the transaction is ultra vires as to the corporation, either as principal or as obligee.

A surety on a bond by or to a corporation is liable thereon, although the transaction is ultra vires as to the corporation, either as principal<sup>44</sup> or as obligee.<sup>45</sup> This rule applies to the sureties on the bond of a bank officer,<sup>46</sup> or municipal officer or agent,<sup>47</sup> or 'a contractor with a municipality.<sup>48</sup> It has been held, however, that where no recovery could be had on an obligation given by a municipal corporation because the debt had been incurred contrary to constitutional and statutory restrictions requiring the voters' approval, no liability attaches to the surety of such obligation.<sup>49</sup>

§ 23. Incomplete or Irregular Instrument

Mere irregularities in, or incompleteness of, the instrument evidencing the obligation of the principal to the creditor or obligee do not affect the surety's liability unless the irregularity or incompleteness is such as to render the obligation void.

Mere irregularities in, or incompleteness of, the instrument evidencing the obligation of the principal to the creditor or obligee do not affect the surety's liability,<sup>50</sup> even though the principal may not be bound by the instrument,<sup>51</sup> unless the irregularity or incompleteness is such as to render the obligation void.<sup>52</sup> Thus the surety's liability is not relieved by an incomplete or uncertain statement in the instrument as to the place of performance,<sup>53</sup> or by a failure to insert the surety's name in the body of the instrument,<sup>54</sup> especially where he signs and seals the instrument.<sup>55</sup>

§ 24. Want of Authority to Make Contract

Want of authority of the person who executes an obligation as the agent or representative of the principal will not, as a general rule, affect the surety's liability thereon, especially in the absence of fraud, even though the obligation is not binding on the principal.

Want of authority of the person who executes an obligation as the agent or representative of the principal will not, as a general rule, affect the surety's liability thereon,<sup>56</sup> especially in the absence of fraud,<sup>57</sup> even though the obligation is not binding on the principal.<sup>58</sup> This rule is especially applicable where there is no positive illegality in the contract,<sup>59</sup> and where the surety was cognizant of the want of authority,<sup>60</sup> or where it affirmatively appears that the principal is in fact indebted or under obligation to the creditor or obligee.<sup>61</sup> A surety signing a partnership note has been held bound, although the note was signed by a member of the firm without authority.<sup>62</sup>

§ 25. Want or Failure of Consideration

Where the obligation is invalid as between the original parties by reason of a total lack or failure of consideration it will not bind the surety.

Where the obligation is invalid as between the original parties by reason of a total lack or failure of consideration it will not bind the surety.<sup>63</sup> Likewise a party cannot be bound as surety for a debt which is not due, by reason of a failure of consideration against the principal,<sup>64</sup> but in case of a partial failure of consideration it is for the principal and not the surety to elect whether to avoid the principal contract on the ground or only to claim a pro rata deduction.<sup>65</sup> Nevertheless as the obligation of a surety arises from the consideration received by his principal, he cannot avail himself of a want of consideration where the principal cannot do so.<sup>66</sup>

C. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY OF SURETYSHIP CONTRACT

§ 26. General Rules

In order to enter into a valid contract creating the relationship of principal and surety, there must be competent parties, an offer and acceptance, and a valid consideration, as well as a sufficient compliance with the formalities, if any, required by law.

In order to enter into a valid contract creating the relationship of principal and surety, as in the case of other contracts, there must be competent parties, an offer and acceptance, and a valid consideration, as well as a sufficient compliance with the formalities, if any, required by law.<sup>67</sup>

§ 27. Assent in General

Suretyship, like other contracts, requires that assent to the contract be manifested by the parties, so that each may know that the other is bound.

Suretyship, like other contracts, requires that assent to the contract be manifested by the parties, so that each may know that the other is bound.<sup>68</sup> Accordingly, a person may not involuntarily, and not as the result of any act on his part, be made surety for another,<sup>69</sup> however responsible that other may be,<sup>70</sup> or whatever security may be given to the surety for the ultimate reimbursement of the sum exacted from him.<sup>71</sup>

§ 28. Consent or Acceptance by Principal

Consent to, or acceptance by, the principal of the suretyship relation is discussed infra §§ 29, 30.

§ 29. — As between Principal and Surety

Generally, as between the principal and surety, it is essential to the existence of a suretyship relation that the surety become such at the request, or with the assent, of the principal, or that the principal have notice of, and accept, the surety's offer to assume the relationship.

Generally as between the principal and surety, it is essential to the existence of a suretyship relation that the surety become such at the request, or with the assent, of the principal,<sup>72</sup> or that the principal have notice of, and accept, the surety's offer to assume the relationship.<sup>73</sup> Accordingly, where a party becomes surety without the consent or acceptance of the principal, he is a mere volunteer,<sup>74</sup> and, although he assumes such relationship with the consent of the creditor, the principal debtor is not bound for a want of privity of contract.<sup>75</sup> The principal's assent to an assumption of suretyship is tantamount to a request,<sup>76</sup> and may be inferred from his subsequent acts and conduct in relation to it,<sup>77</sup> as by his appearing and defending an action on the obligation,<sup>78</sup> by his suffering a default in an action against both principal and surety on the obligation,<sup>79</sup> or by his acceptance of, or acquiescence in, the benefits of the contract.<sup>80</sup>

On the other hand, the relationship of principal and surety may be created without the consent or knowledge of the principal and without any consideration passing between them,<sup>81</sup> as where the surety pays an obligation which is primarily due from the principal, whereby the principal becomes unjustly enriched,<sup>82</sup> and under such circumstances the surety is not a volunteer.<sup>83</sup>

Surety as principal to another surety. In order to make one surety a principal as to another surety it must be shown that the latter became surety at his request.<sup>84</sup>

§ 30. — As between Surety and Creditor

Where one binds himself as surety at the request or with the assent of the creditor alone, as between them, the relationship is that of suretyship, and is attendant with all the rights and liabilities flowing therefrom.

Where one binds himself as surety at the request or with the assent of the creditor alone, as between them, the relationship is that of suretyship,<sup>85</sup> and is attendant with all the rights and liabilities flowing therefrom,<sup>86</sup> although without any knowledge, assent, or request on the part of the principal;<sup>87</sup> and as between the surety and creditor the latter is bound by all the rules of law respecting sureties,<sup>88</sup> and the surety likewise is bound by such rules in respect of his rights and liabilities as against the creditor.<sup>89</sup>

§ 31. Notice to, and Acceptance by, Creditor

In order that the surety may occupy that position and avail himself of the rights, defenses, and remedies of a surety as against the creditor, the fact of the suretyship must be known to the creditor.

In order that the surety may occupy that position and avail himself of the rights, defenses, and remedies of a surety as against the creditor, the fact of the suretyship must be known to the creditor;<sup>90</sup> otherwise, the surety may be held liable as principal obligor.<sup>91</sup> If the fact of suretyship appears on the face of the contract, it is sufficient notice to the creditor.<sup>92</sup> However, if it does not so appear, notice or knowledge of it must be clearly and satisfactorily brought home to him by the surety, to enable the latter to avail himself of the protection which the law affords to sureties.<sup>93</sup>

Exercise of power to affix name of surety. Where authority is given the creditor to affix the name of an individual to an instrument as surety, the creditor can signify his acceptance of such individual as surety only by the execution of the power,<sup>94</sup> which must be done within a reasonable time.<sup>95</sup>

§ 32. — Effect of Knowledge by Creditor

As a general rule, where, as between themselves, parties stand in the relation of principal and surety, although such relationship does not appear on the face of the instrument which they have executed, the creditor must have regard to the equities of the surety in any subsequent action which he may take regarding the debt.

Where, as between themselves, parties stand in the relation of principal and surety, although such relationship does not appear on the face of the instrument which they have executed, the creditor must have regard to the equities of the surety in any subsequent action which he may take regarding the debt,<sup>96</sup> where he has knowledge of the relationship at the time he executes or receives the instrument,<sup>97</sup>

In New Jersey

(1) If a creditor knows that one joint debtor is primarily liable for the entire debt, in equity the relationship of principal and surety exists.—Taylor v. Shute, 39 A. 663, 61 N.J.Law 256—Reinfield v. Fidelity Union Trust Co., 198 A. 220, 123 N. J.Eq. 428, affirmed 5 A.2d 699, 125 or before the act occurs in respect of which the surety claims protection.<sup>98</sup> There are, however, some early cases to the contrary,<sup>99</sup> based in some instances on the rule against parol evidence to contradict a written instrument, as discussed in Evidence § 985, or on the estoppel arising from the execution of an instrument under seal.<sup>1</sup>

By way of exception to the general rule, it has been held that, where several persons sign an obligation in which they jointly and severally promise "as principals," each is estopped to prove that he signed only as surety and that the creditor had knowledge thereof.<sup>2</sup> However, on the other hand, it has been held that, where the fact that two debtors, as between themselves, are principal and surety is known to the creditor, he is bound to respect the relationship, even though, by the terms of the security held by him, the real surety occupies the position of principal.<sup>3</sup>

Sufficiency of knowledge. Where the creditor has knowledge of such facts as would put a reasonably prudent man on an inquiry which, if followed up, would presumably have resulted in knowledge of suretyship, he is chargeable with notice thereof,<sup>4</sup> although he did not act in bad faith in not making an inquiry.<sup>5</sup> However, knowledge that one person is the principal, and others who appear as such in the instrument are sureties, is not shown by the mere fact that the former paid the interest on the debt.<sup>6</sup>

§ 33. Express Contract in General

No particular form or expression is necessary to create a contract of suretyship, provided the language used is definite and certain and shows an intention to create the relationship.

No particular form of contract is necessary to create a contract of suretyship.<sup>7</sup> The relationship may be created by written correspondence,<sup>8</sup> or in the form of a bond as collateral to the bond and mortgage of another.<sup>9</sup> Likewise, it is not necessary that any particular forms or expressions of language be used,<sup>10</sup> or that the instrument specify the relationship,<sup>11</sup> since, in determining whether the contract is one of suretyship, the courts will consider the substance rather than the form of the contract;<sup>12</sup> and provided the nature, character, and extent of the obligation are described in certain and definite language,<sup>13</sup> any language or expression is sufficient which, by general rules of construction, shows an intention of the parties to create the relationship.<sup>14</sup>

Mere willingness. A contract of suretyship does not arise from a writing in which the signer merely expresses his willingness to stand security for another person to whom credit is subsequently extended;<sup>15</sup> nor does it arise from an intention, and an unsuccessful attempt, to become a surety.<sup>16</sup>

Necessity of writing. In some jurisdictions a contract of suretyship is required to be in writing,<sup>17</sup> and a mere verbal assurance that the obligation of another will be paid does not render a party liable as a surety.<sup>18</sup>

Bills and notes. The relationship of principal and surety may be established by a bill or a note.<sup>19</sup> Generally the relationship is established by adding the word "surety"<sup>20</sup> or some equivalent expression<sup>21</sup> to the signature, either on the face or on the back of the bill or the note. The relationship may be created by the addition of words indicating that it was intended as collateral security.<sup>22</sup>

§ 34. — Different Instruments

While a surety is generally bound with his principal in the same instrument, there is nothing in law which prevents him from becoming bound as surety in a separate instrument.

While ordinarily there is an identity of obligation, as discussed infra § 92, this does not necessarily mean identity of instrument;<sup>23</sup> and, while a surety is usually bound with his principal by the same instrument,<sup>24</sup> there is nothing in law which prevents him from becoming bound as surety in a separate instrument,<sup>25</sup> subsequent in time,<sup>26</sup> or on a new consideration.<sup>27</sup>

§ 35. — Qualification of Liability

It is not necessary that the obligations of the principal and the surety be equal and ordinarily the surety may fix the precise terms and conditions on which he is willing to become a surety.

Although as a general rule the surety's liability is the same as that of the principal, and cannot be greater than that of the principal, either as to amount or as to the burdensome character of the conditions, it is not necessary that the obligations of the principal and surety be equal,<sup>28</sup> and a lack of coincidence between the obligation assumed by the principal and that assumed by the surety does not render the obligation of the latter invalid.<sup>29</sup> Ordinarily, the surety may fix the precise terms on which he is willing to become a surety,<sup>30</sup> and may qualify his liability by limiting the amount for which he can be held liable,<sup>31</sup> or he may be surety for the performance of a part only of what the principal is obligated to do.<sup>32</sup> However, the surety has no right to contract for the abridgement of any right to enforce such liability as may accrue under the contract.<sup>33</sup> Likewise, the affixing of a certain amount between the signature and seal of a surety will not limit his liability as expressed and fixed in the body of the bond;<sup>34</sup> and he cannot limit his liability on a written obligation by a parol agreement.<sup>35</sup>

§ 36. — Agreement to Become Surety

Although an agreement to become a surety does not make the promisor a surety, if he fails to become a surety as agreed, and the agreement has been relied on, he may be held liable for a breach of his contract, to the same extent as though he had become surety.

A contract to pay another to become surety or to lend one his credit is not unlawful,<sup>36</sup> and is based on a sufficient consideration.<sup>37</sup> Accordingly, a contract to become surety is binding on the promising surety, although the obligation between the principal and the creditor is not complete in minor details,<sup>38</sup> or does not absolutely conform to the agreement to become a surety.<sup>39</sup> If such an agreement is entered into by an unauthorized agent, the surety's subsequent signing of the instrument constitutes a ratification of the agreement.<sup>40</sup>

Operation and effect. Although an agreement to become a surety does not make the promisor a surety,<sup>41</sup> it is the duty of the promisor to become a surety in compliance with its terms,<sup>42</sup> and he is not released therefrom by the other party's failure to make a formal demand that he sign the obligation.<sup>43</sup> If he fails to become a surety as agreed and the agreement has been relied on, he cannot repudiate the contract,<sup>44</sup> and he may be held liable for a breach of his contract, to the same extent as though he had become surety;<sup>45</sup> and it has been held that such an agreement may be enforced by the creditor, even though he was ignorant of it at the time it was made.<sup>46</sup> However, a person who actually has not become a surety, although he has agreed to do so, cannot be made liable by the false and fraudulent representation of an agent, without authority, that he has become such surety.<sup>47</sup>

Agreement to deliver new bond. Where a surety agrees to deliver a new bond on the return of the old one, the surety would be liable following the obligee's surrender of the old bond, even though it has not issued a new one at the time of the principal's default,<sup>48</sup> since the execution of the new bond would be merely putting in written form that which has already been agreed on.<sup>49</sup>

Covenant to relieve one who is surety by becoming a surety in his stead may be sued on, in an action of covenant, in the name of such surety.<sup>50</sup>

§ 37. — Statutory Requirements in General

A surety's obligation is not rendered invalid by reason of the fact that a bond given by him does not conform to the statute under which it is given, or that the statute may be unconstitutional, since it may be good as against him, as a common-law bond, if voluntarily given.

A surety's obligation is not rendered invalid by reason of the fact that a bond given by him does not conform to the statute under which it is given,<sup>51</sup> or that the statute may be unconstitutional,<sup>52</sup> since it may be good as against him, as a common-law bond, if voluntarily given.<sup>53</sup> A surety may be held liable on his obligation, although the statute is violated, by the naming of a wrong obligee,<sup>54</sup> or by making the bond joint only, and not joint and several,<sup>55</sup> or by providing for a larger<sup>56</sup> or smaller<sup>57</sup> penalty than the statute provides; or by adding a condition not specifically named in the statute;<sup>58</sup> or by not taking security in addition to the sureties.<sup>59</sup> Where it is required that a certain number of sureties shall sign the bond, if fewer than that number voluntarily and knowingly sign,

§ 38. Implied or Quasi Contract in General

While an obligation in suretyship will not be implied, a form of suretyship, known as "involuntary suretyship," may arise, without any contract being expressed in positive terms of suretyship, or any actual intent to form that relationship.

While an obligation in suretyship will not be implied and never arises by act of the parties except by express contract,<sup>63</sup> a form of suretyship, known as "involuntary suretyship," may arise, without any contract being expressed in positive terms of suretyship, or any actual intent to form that relationship, out of a contract whose chief object is to accomplish some purpose other than that of becoming liable for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, but which, by implication of law incidentally, has that effect, by reason of the position which the parties have assumed toward each other or toward the property out of which the debt or obligation due to the obligee is paid;<sup>64</sup> and, where the relationship so results, it is immaterial that it does not appear on the face of the transaction.<sup>65</sup> This form of suretyship may arise out of an implied parol agreement between the parties,<sup>66</sup> or it may arise between obligors on different instruments or obligations,<sup>67</sup>

unless the undertakings are entirely separate and independent.<sup>68</sup> However, a person who promises as principal to pay to a creditor a definite sum does not become a surety as to an indebtedness of a third person included in that sum.<sup>69</sup>

An indorser of a negotiable instrument, except an indorser "without recourse," may be liable as a surety.<sup>70</sup>

Surety of agent, acting within the scope of his authority, may be considered the surety of the principal.<sup>71</sup>

§ 39. — By Execution of Joint Obligation

When two or more persons enter into a joint obligation, as between themselves, each is a principal for his proportionate share of the debt or obligation, and a surety as to the shares or acts of the others, but as far as the creditor is concerned, each obligor is a principal as to the whole of the debt or obligation.

Where two or more persons enter into a joint obligation, as between themselves, each is a principal for his proportionate share of the debt or obligation, or so far as his own acts are concerned, and a surety as to the shares or acts of the others.<sup>72</sup> In this class of cases, however, as far as the creditor or obligee is concerned, each obligor is a principal as to the whole of the debt or obligation,<sup>73</sup> and the suretyship cannot be imposed on the creditor or obligee, without his consent, so as to affect his rights.<sup>74</sup>

§ 40. — By Assumption of Indebtedness

A common instance of involuntary suretyship, at least as between the principal and surety themselves, occurs where one party to a contract, as a part of the agreement, assumes an indebtedness owing by the other to a third person, the one assuming the indebtedness becoming the principal, and the former debtor a surety.

A common instance of involuntary suretyship, at least as between the principal and surety themselves, occurs where one party to a contract, as a part of the agreement, assumes an indebtedness owing by the other to a third person, the one assuming the indebtedness becoming the principal, and the former debtor a surety.<sup>75</sup> Accordingly, as discussed in Mortgages § 416, where a purchaser of mortgaged land assumes and agrees to pay the mortgage debt, he becomes the principal debtor, and the mortgagor or grantor occupies the position of a surety; and, as discussed in Partnership § 264, where, on the dissolution of a firm or a change in the membership, the continuing partners or new firm assumes the firm debts, those who assume the debts are, as among themselves, the principal debtor and the retiring partners are regarded as sureties.

As to creditor. Even though the creditor is not a party to the agreement,<sup>76</sup> it is made for his benefit and he is impliedly included as within the privity thereof,<sup>77</sup> and, if he accepts such agreement, he is bound to observe and respect the relationship of principal and surety arising therefrom,<sup>78</sup> unless it is otherwise specially contracted by the parties.<sup>79</sup>

§ 41. — By Mortgage or Pledge

A common instance of real suretyship, under which property mortgaged or pledged is said to stand as surety, and the surety held liable as such only to the extent of the property mortgaged or pledged, arises where property is mortgaged, without personal liability, to secure the debt or obligation of another, or where it is pledged for the same purpose.

Joint mortgage

(1) Joint mortgage to secure the separate debts of the mortgagors makes each a principal as to his debt, and a surety as to the debts of the others.—Van Rensselaer v. Akin, 22 Wend., N.Y., 549.

Pledgor held not volunteer

Where plaintiff placed stocks and money in the hands of a broker at the request of defendants, who were dealing with broker in purchase of stocks on margin, to aid defendants in meeting broker's demands for more margin, plaintiff was not a mere "volunteer," so as to prevent recovery from defendants for loss of the stocks and money.—Damler v. Baine, 51 N.E.2d 885, 114 Ind.App. 534.

Where a prior mortgagee of land agrees to subordinate his lien to that of a subsequent mortgage, he occupies the position of a real surety as to the indebtedness secured by such subsequent mortgage.<sup>85</sup> However, where a mortgage is given by a third party, and accepted by a grantor, as part of the initial payment of the grantee toward the purchase price of property, the relationship of principal and surety does not arise between the mortgagor and the grantee.<sup>86</sup> Likewise, an assignee of an equitable mortgage given to secure an indorsement on a note executed in part payment of the purchase price of lands on which a prior mortgage was given, who also holds a conveyance of the equity of redemption, does not stand in the position of surety for the mortgage debt.<sup>87</sup>

Partnership. A partner who mortgages his separate property to secure a firm debt has been held to be a surety,<sup>88</sup> although there is authority to the contrary.<sup>89</sup> However, where a firm executes a mortgage on property belonging to the firm and on the individual property of one of the partners, to secure a debt owing by the firm, the partner owning the individual property is not a surety as to the other partners, but a joint principal,<sup>90</sup> although the firm gives the individual owner a certificate showing that the debt secured is a firm debt, and that the individual property is merely used as collateral, and that the firm will protect him from loss.<sup>91</sup>

Contract held not impossible of performance

A contract by which defendants agreed to return stock deposited by plaintiff with a broker at defendants' request, to aid defendants in meeting broker's demand for more margin, or to reimburse plaintiff, was not rendered impossible of performance because plaintiff thereby empowered broker to sell the stock, since defendants were then liable for reimbursement.—Damler v. Baine, supra.

Transaction held not suretyship

Seller of furniture to lessee of hotel who vested title to furniture in lessee and took as security for payment thereof an assignment of lease on the hotel was held not a surety so as to be discharged by change in amount due under lease on ground that such alteration was without seller's knowledge and consent.—Smith v. Thomsen, 48 P.2d 102, 8 Cal.App.2d 603.

Property wrongfully pledged

The relation between a bank and a trust became one of suretyship when bank learned that certain bonds held by it as collateral security for the payment of a trustee's individual indebtedness were claimed to be the property of the trust estate.—DuPort v. First Nat. Bank of Glens Falls, 29 N.Y.S.2d 729, 262 App.Div. 267, reversed on other grounds 43 N.E.2d 34, 288 N.Y. 261.—Duport v. First Nat. Bank, 15 N.Y.S.2d 372, 257 App.Div. 693.

85. Ala.—Moses v. Home Bldg., etc., Assoc., 14 So. 412, 100 Ala. 465.

Pledge of customer's securities. Where a broker pledges a customer's securities for his own debts, such securities stand as surety for such debts,<sup>92</sup> but the customer himself, although he has authorized the pledge, is not a surety, since, if the security is insufficient, no personal liability attaches to him.<sup>93</sup>

Pledge of policy. The pledge of an insurance policy, by insured, to secure a loan from insurer pursuant to the loan feature of the policy does not create a status of suretyship in favor of the beneficiary or assignee of the policy, where insurer deducts the value of the loan from the policy on the death of insured,<sup>94</sup> unless the contract of insurance requires insured to obtain the consent of the beneficiary or assignee before pledging the policy.<sup>95</sup>

The relationship of principal and surety may arise from a change in the relations of the parties to a contract.

The relationship of principal and surety may arise from a change in the relations of the parties to a contract;<sup>96</sup> and, even where there is already a contract of suretyship, a change in the relation of the parties may cause their respective liabilities, at least as between themselves, to be reversed.<sup>97</sup>

In the relationship of the parties may cause the principal to become the surety.

Where there is a contract of suretyship, a change in the relationship of the parties may cause the principal debtor to become the surety.<sup>98</sup> Accordingly, where the surety, for a valuable consideration, agrees with the principal to pay the indebtedness or perform the obligation, the principal becomes the surety.<sup>99</sup>

§ 44. — From Surety to Principal

A surety may become a principal by some new arrangement between himself and the creditor, irrespective of the principal debtor; or he may become a principal, at least as between himself and the original principal, where he agrees, for a valuable consideration, with the original principal to pay the indebtedness or to perform the obligation.

A surety may become a principal by some new arrangement between himself and the creditor, irrespective of the principal debtor.<sup>1</sup> So, also, a surety becomes the principal, at least as between himself and the original principal, where he agrees, for a valuable consideration, with the original principal to pay the indebtedness or to perform the obligation,<sup>2</sup> or where he takes indemnity against loss.<sup>3</sup> However, a surety does not become a principal, by consenting to a change in the original contract, where he does not become a party to the contract or bind himself beyond the obligation of his bond;<sup>4</sup> or by giving a new obligation to the creditor in place of the old one;<sup>5</sup> or by reason of the maturity of the principal obligation;<sup>6</sup> or by reason of forbearance granted to him by the creditor;<sup>7</sup> or by making a payment and agreeing to an extension;<sup>8</sup> or by a gift from the principal of a part of the proceeds of the note on which he is surety;<sup>9</sup>

or by the application by the creditor of the proceeds of the note to some part of the obligation of the surety to the principal;<sup>10</sup> or by becoming a partner with his principal.<sup>11</sup>

Joint debtors. Where one of two or more joint debtors undertakes to pay the entire indebtedness, he becomes the principal, and the remainder the sureties;<sup>12</sup> or, if the surety receives part of the debt in money from the principal, they become joint debtors.<sup>13</sup>

Limitation of agreement. An agreement by a surety to be treated as a principal is not limited by another clause in which he consents to an extension of the time of payment in such a manner as to restrict the right of the creditor, as against the surety, to one extension.<sup>14</sup>

§ 45. — Notice to, and Acceptance by, Creditor

Under some decisions the creditor is not bound to recognize the changed relationship unless he assents thereto, while under others he is obliged to respect the rights of the surety when the facts of the changed relationship are known to him.

Although the creditor is not bound to respect a changed relationship where he is without notice,<sup>15</sup> there is a lack of harmony in the decisions as to whether the creditor is compelled to recognize the changed relationship when informed of it.<sup>16</sup> Under some decisions, the creditor is not bound to recognize the changed relationship, but may ignore it unless he assents thereto.<sup>17</sup> Accordingly, where one is a principal obligor, he cannot, without the consent of the creditor, transform the principal obligation into an accessory one of suretyship.<sup>18</sup> Under other decisions the creditor is obliged to respect the rights of the surety, when the facts are known to him;<sup>19</sup> but the notice to the creditor must be definite and distinct, and so given as fully and fairly to apprise him of the new agreement and of the changed attitude of the debtor claiming the rights of a surety.<sup>20</sup>

Reestablishment of original position. It has been held that a surety who, by arrangement between himself and the principal debtor, takes the primary liability on himself may, by subsequent arrangements, reestablish himself in the position and with the rights of a surety, without the consent of the creditor.<sup>21</sup>

§ 46. Execution of Instrument

General rules apply in respect of the necessity of a seal on a contract of suretyship.

General rules apply in respect of the necessity for, and sufficiency of, a seal on a contract of suretyship.<sup>22</sup> Where the bond recites that it is "sealed with our seals," sureties after whose names seals are omitted are presumed to have adopted the seals after preceding names.<sup>23</sup> The absence of a seal against the signature of a surety does not affect the liability of the other signers.<sup>24</sup> Likewise, the failure to attach the seal of the principal does not relieve the surety from liability.<sup>25</sup>

§ 47. — Time of Execution

It is not necessary that a suretyship contract be executed at the same time as the contract which it secures.

A suretyship contract may become operative as against the surety, notwithstanding it is executed before the execution of the contract which it secures.<sup>26</sup> So, where a contract of suretyship is entered into to secure the performance of a particular contract which the surety knows has not yet been executed, delay in the execution of such contract will not discharge the surety where it is not unreasonable,<sup>27</sup> and there is no showing that the surety has been injured thereby.<sup>28</sup>

§ 48. — Signing by Principal

- a. In general
- b. Statutory bond
- c. Joint or joint and several bonds

a. In General

Where the nature of the bond or obligation is such that the failure of the principal to sign the instrument affects the surety injuriously, the surety is not bound, but, where the failure of the principal to sign the instrument in no way affects the rights or liabilities of the surety, the instrument is valid, and the surety is bound.

Whether the principal is required to sign the bond or instrument, evidencing the suretyship contract, in order that the sureties may be held liable thereon, is a subject on which there is an apparent conflict in the decisions.<sup>29</sup> As has been said, whether or not the principal obligor should sign generally depends on the nature of the bond;<sup>30</sup> the statutory requirements, if it is an official or judicial bond;<sup>31</sup> or the nature of the liability imposed.<sup>32</sup> Accordingly, where the nature of the bond or obligation is such that the failure of the principal to sign the instrument affects the surety injuriously, the better rule is that the surety is not bound,<sup>33</sup> as where no obligation attaches to the principal outside of the bond itself, and the surety, therefore, has no remedy over against the principal.<sup>34</sup>

On the other hand, unless the surety has signed on the express condition that the principal should also sign before delivery of the instrument to the obligee, where the failure of the principal to sign the instrument in no way affects the rights or liabilities of the surety, the instrument is valid, and the surety is bound,<sup>35</sup> especially where he waives

the signing of the bond by the principal,<sup>36</sup> as where he executes and delivers the bond with the intention that it shall constitute a contract, notwithstanding the absence of the principal's signature.<sup>37</sup> Thus, a principal's failure to sign the bond does not affect the surety's liability thereon where the principal is liable independently of the bond,<sup>38</sup> as where, independently of the bond, the liability of the principal is fixed by contract,<sup>39</sup> or by operation of law,<sup>40</sup> or where the surety is equally bound by the contract to secure the performance of which the bond is given.<sup>41</sup> In such cases the failure of the principal to sign the bond renders it only technically, and not substantially, defective, and does not release the surety,<sup>42</sup> and imposes on the obligee no duty to inquire whether it was delivered by the sureties on condition that the principal should execute it.<sup>43</sup>

Instrument invalid on face. According to some decisions, however, a bond which purports on its face to be the obligation of one as principal and others as sureties, but which is executed only by the sureties, does not on its face show any contract obligation on the part of the sureties,<sup>44</sup> unless it appears that the sureties have waived the execution of the bond by the principal, and authorized its delivery to the obligee as a valid obligation,<sup>45</sup> which waiver must be shown by positive proof.<sup>46</sup> In such a case the obligee is chargeable with notice that the instrument is imperfect;<sup>47</sup> and the surety may show that he did not assent to its delivery before being signed by the principal.<sup>48</sup>

Unauthorized signature. Under some decisions it is held that, although a principal is not bound by a suretyship contract by reason of his name being signed thereto without his authority, the sureties who properly execute are nevertheless bound thereby.<sup>49</sup> By other decisions, however, the sureties are regarded as not bound in such a case,<sup>50</sup> unless they sign with knowledge of the fact that the principal's signature has been attached without authority,<sup>51</sup> or unless the principal is already bound independently of the bond.<sup>52</sup>

A statutory bond generally is invalid as to the sureties if, without their knowledge and consent, it is accepted without being signed by the principal as required by statute, unless the statutory requirement is merely directory, and the principal is liable without signing.

c. Joint or Joint and Several Bonds

As a general rule, the failure of the principal to execute a bond which purports to be a joint and several bond or several only does not invalidate it as to the surety.

as to a surety,<sup>55</sup> unless there was an express agreement that the bond should not be valid until so executed.<sup>56</sup> This rule is especially applicable where the principal is primarily liable without reference to the bond,<sup>57</sup> and when the bond contains a clause of subrogation entitling the surety to be subrogated to the obligee's claim against the principal,<sup>58</sup> and where similar bonds for previous years, furnished by the same surety, were not signed by the principal.<sup>59</sup> The principal who gives such a bond is equally liable thereon although he has not signed it.<sup>60</sup> On the other hand, it is held that a joint and several bond so executed is not binding on the sureties<sup>61</sup> unless they sign with the intention of being bound, whether or not the bond is signed by the principal.<sup>62</sup>

Joint bond. A bond which in form is the joint obligation of a principal and his sureties, and not joint and several, requires the signature of the principal to render it valid and binding on the sureties,<sup>63</sup> unless the sureties sign with the intention of being bound without requiring the principal's signature,<sup>64</sup> and except in those jurisdictions in which such an obligation is, by statute, regarded as joint and several.<sup>65</sup>

§ 49. — Signing by Surety in General

Ordinarily the proper place for the signature of a surety to a bond is at the foot of the instrument, but one may nevertheless become bound by signing the instrument in any part thereof where there is an apparent intention to become bound as surety.

General rules apply to the necessity for, and sufficiency of, a surety's signature to a contract of suretyship.<sup>66</sup> Accordingly, a surety bond to become a binding obligation must be executed by the obligor.<sup>67</sup> As in other cases his signature may be made by a mark,<sup>68</sup> or his signature may be cut from one instrument and attached to another where the liability intended to be assumed is not changed.<sup>69</sup>

Place of signing. Ordinarily the proper place for the signature of a surety to a bond is at the foot of the instrument;<sup>70</sup> and, where a person so subscribes his name, with the manifest intention of being bound by the conditions of the bond, he generally will be regarded as a surety, although his name is not mentioned in the body of the bond.<sup>71</sup> However, it is not essential to the validity of the bond as against the surety that his signature should be in the proper place.<sup>72</sup> In the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary, and where there is an apparent intention to become bound as surety, a party may become such by signing the instrument in any part thereof,<sup>73</sup> such as on the back of the instrument.<sup>74</sup> Where a signature is thus misplaced, it is a question of fact as to whether the signer intended to become a surety.<sup>75</sup>

not liable as a surety;<sup>76</sup> on the other hand, if the instrument indicates that a signer is a surety, he cannot escape liability because he signed in the place for witnesses,<sup>77</sup> although his name is not mentioned in the body of the instrument.<sup>78</sup>

Two signatures by same person. The same person may sign the instrument twice, in two different capacities,<sup>79</sup> or the second signature may be merely by way of explanation of the first signature.<sup>80</sup>

Two instruments and one signature. Where two contracts appear on one sheet, the latter only being signed by the surety, it becomes a question of intention whether he is liable on both;<sup>81</sup> and, where a surety promises to become liable according to specifications to be agreed on thereafter, it is not necessary that he be a party to and sign the subsequent agreement.<sup>82</sup>

§ 50. — Signing by Cosureties

Questions relating to the signing by a surety are discussed supra § 49, conditional signing by a co-surety, infra § 52, and the rights and liabilities between cosureties infra §§ 343-385.

§ 52. — Conditional Signing

- a. In general
- b. Effect of conditions as to obligee in general
- c. Signing by principal
- d. Signing by other surety
- e. Performance of condition

- f. Waiver of condition
- g. Notice of condition

a. In General

A surety, in agreeing to become such, may sign the instrument on condition that, before he becomes liable thereon, certain acts are to be performed by the principal or others.

A surety, in agreeing to become such, may sign the instrument on the condition that, before he becomes liable thereon, certain acts are to be performed by the principal or others.<sup>83</sup> Although a signing may be conditional without the use of express words,<sup>84</sup> generally, conditions will not be implied,<sup>85</sup> and the mere statement by the principal to the obligee of the necessity of performing a certain act before asking the surety to sign does not make such act a condition precedent to the delivery of the bond.<sup>86</sup> A surety for the payment of money may stipulate for the institution of proceedings against the principal before he shall become liable.<sup>87</sup> Likewise, a surety for the loan of money may require that the indebtedness be evidenced in a certain way, as by note<sup>88</sup> or draft,<sup>89</sup> or that it may be secured by collateral given by the creditor.<sup>90</sup> As a condition to signing a mortgage note, the surety may require the payee to agree to have the insurance on the mortgaged property continued in force until the note is paid.<sup>91</sup>

b. Effect of Conditions as to Obligee in General

If the surety has agreed to be bound only on the performance of a particular condition, which fact is known to the obligee, it is well settled that the surety is not bound unless such condition is performed or its performance is waived. Where the condition is not known to the obligee, the better rule is that a breach thereof does not relieve the surety from liability.

Waiver of condition see infra subdivision f of this section.

However, where the condition is not known to the obligee, there is some conflict in the decisions as to its effect on the surety's liability to the creditor or obligee. By what is known as the better rule, if the condition is not known to the obligee, a breach thereof does not relieve the surety from liability<sup>93</sup> on the ground that he is estopped to set up any condition not known to the obligee, on which his signature was obtained.<sup>94</sup> On the other hand, there are decisions to the effect that, even though the obligee has no knowledge of the condition, the surety is not bound if the instrument is delivered by the principal without the performance of the condition.<sup>95</sup>

Notice of performance to surety. Where the condition is the performance of some act by the principal, formal notice to the surety of such performance is not necessary.<sup>96</sup>

Additional security. Where the contract is made on a condition for additional security that does not become effective until after the exhaustion of the principal security, a failure to perform such condition does not discharge a surety on the principal bond or contract.<sup>97</sup>

c. Signing by Principal

Where a surety signs a note or bond on condition that the principal will also sign it, which condition is known to the payee or obligee, as a general rule, the surety is not bound if the principal delivers the instrument without signing it, but, where the payee or obligee has no notice, actual or constructive, of the condition, the surety is bound.

Where a surety signs a note or bond on condition that the principal will also sign it, which condition is known to the payee or obligee, the surety is not bound where the principal delivers the instrument without signing it, unless he waives such condition.<sup>98</sup> However, where the obligee has no notice, actual or constructive, of the condition, the surety is bound,<sup>99</sup> especially where, on learning of the nonperformance of the condition, he does not raise any objection.<sup>1</sup> So, where a bond is good without the signature of the principal, and the sureties' recourse against him is in no way impaired by his failure to sign, the fact that the sureties signed the bond on the express condition that the principal should also sign is no defense to an action thereon.<sup>2</sup>

Delivery to third person for completion. Where a surety, after signing the bond, on condition that it be executed by a certain person as principal, delivers it to a third person to be completed, it constitutes a mere delivery in escrow;<sup>3</sup> and, where such person signs the principal's name to the bond, by himself as agent, without authority therefor, and delivers it to the obligee, the condition is not fulfilled,<sup>4</sup> and there is not a sufficient delivery of the bond to make it an enforceable obligation.<sup>5</sup>

d. Signing by Other Surety

- (1) In general
- (2) When not made condition
- (3) Promise of obligee to procure other surety

(1) In General

As a general rule, where a surety signs an obligation and turns it over to the principal on the condition that others are also to sign it, he is bound, although the instrument, regular on its face, is delivered by the principal in violation of the condition, if the obligee accepts it without notice of the condition, either actual or constructive.

As a general rule, sometimes by virtue of express statute, where a surety signs an obligation

Failure of payee to procure signature

A maker who signed note as accommodation surety, on condition that note should be signed by principals, was not required to resort to principles governing fraud to avoid liability, since payee's failure to procure signatures of principals did not have effect simply to release surety, in that he had never been bound, contingency on which he was to become liable not having occurred.—Exchange Nat. Bank v. Parsons, Tex.Civ.App., 116 S.W.2d 817.

and turns it over to the principal on the condition that others are also to sign it, he is bound, although the instrument, regular on its face, is delivered by the principal in violation of the condition, if the obligee accepts it without notice of the condition, either actual or constructive.<sup>6</sup> Under this rule, the instrument, as so delivered to the principal, is not merely an escrow,<sup>7</sup> and the surety is bound on the principle of estoppel,<sup>8</sup> for the reason that, since the creditor is wholly innocent in the transaction, he is entitled to stand on the instrument as a complete and binding contract as between the principal and surety and himself,<sup>9</sup> and for the further reason that, where the surety intrusts the delivery of the instrument to his agent for the purpose of obtaining signatures before delivering the contract to the creditor or obligee, and the agent makes delivery in violation of his instructions, the surety must suffer for the misconduct of his agent,<sup>10</sup> even though his agent is the principal obligor.<sup>11</sup> Accordingly, one who signs or indorses a note as surety cannot, as against an innocent payee or any other bona fide holder for value, set up that the principal delivered it in violation of a condition that certain other person or persons should first sign or indorse it,<sup>12</sup> notwithstanding any fraud of the principal in procuring his signature,<sup>13</sup> since no agreement of the sureties, among themselves or with the principal, that, if all of them are not bound, none of them shall be, will affect the rights of the payee, unless he has notice of the agreement, and that it has been violated prior to, or at the time that he takes the note and parts with, the consideration.<sup>14</sup>

On the other hand, in some jurisdictions, where a surety signs a bond on condition that others shall also sign it before delivery by the principal to the obligee, it has been held broadly that he is not bound on the bond where no other signatures are procured,<sup>15</sup> although the instrument provides that those who sign shall be liable notwithstanding such a condition.<sup>16</sup> However, this rule does not apply to commercial paper which comes into the hands of a bona fide purchaser before maturity, who is without notice of the condition.<sup>17</sup>

Obligee with notice. Where, however, the creditor or obligee has notice of the condition when he receives the instrument, he cannot hold the surety liable thereon, unless the latter waives such condition;<sup>18</sup> and this rule also applies as against the obligee's assignee.<sup>19</sup>

vides that no agreement that other persons are to sign shall be a defense thereto and that the person to whom the instrument is delivered has absolute authority to deliver it.<sup>20</sup>

Release of some as release of all. It has been held that, where some of the sureties are released for failure to comply with a condition to procure additional signers, all others who signed are also released,<sup>21</sup> even though such condition was imposed after the instrument was executed by some of the sureties unconditionally.<sup>22</sup>

(2) When Not Made Condition

Where a surety does not make the execution of the instrument by other sureties a condition precedent to the legal existence of the instrument, he cannot rely on such execution as a condition to his being liable on the instrument.

Where a surety does not make the execution of the instrument by other sureties a condition precedent to the legal existence of the instrument, he cannot rely on such execution as a condition to his being liable on the instrument,<sup>23</sup> as where, without making his liability conditional on others signing, he merely tells the obligee that others are to join.<sup>24</sup> So, a mere representation<sup>25</sup> or promise,<sup>26</sup> contemporaneous with the delivery of the instrument, that certain other persons should also execute it, is not a condition the nonperformance of which will impair the validity of the obligation delivered in reliance thereon.

Expectancy or belief. In the absence of fraud or deceit, a surety's mere expectation or well founded belief or understanding that other parties will sign will not make delivery by him conditional on an execution by others.<sup>27</sup>

(3) Promise of Obligee to Procure Other Surety

By some decisions, where the surety signs on the agreement of the creditor or obligee to procure additional signatures as sureties, a failure to procure such signatures relieves the surety from liability.

By some decisions, where the surety signs on the agreement of the creditor or obligee, or his agent, to procure additional signatures as sureties, a failure to procure such signatures relieves the surety from liability.<sup>28</sup> By other decisions, however, a failure to comply with such agreement does not impair the surety's obligation,<sup>29</sup> since, as discussed in Escrows § 7, the agreement is void because a note or bond cannot be delivered to the payee or obligee as an escrow. However, such failure entitles the surety to recover damages for a breach of the agreement,<sup>30</sup> or to set them up by way of counterclaim.<sup>31</sup>

e. Performance of Condition

A surety who signs on condition may insist on a strict compliance therewith.

A surety who signs on condition may insist on a strict compliance therewith.<sup>32</sup> A condition that another sign as cosurety has been held sufficiently complied with where the signature of such person is made on the back of the instrument,<sup>33</sup> or as indorser,<sup>34</sup> or is affixed by an authorized agent;<sup>35</sup> and, if the surety signing on condition knows that the bond is to be executed by the other through an agent, he is bound to examine such agent's authority, and is not relieved if the other is not bound because of a defect in the agent's authority.<sup>36</sup> However, the condition is not sufficiently complied with if such signature is affixed by an unauthorized person,<sup>37</sup> even though it is subsequently ratified.<sup>38</sup> So, also, a condition that others sign as cosureties is not complied with by such persons signing a long time after a default by the principal,<sup>39</sup> or where their signatures are obtained by fraud,<sup>40</sup> or are forged,<sup>41</sup> unless there is nothing on the face of the instrument to put the obligee on notice, in which case the surety is estopped to deny the genuineness of such signatures.<sup>42</sup>

f. Waiver of Condition

One who signs a bond as surety conditionally may waive such condition and thus estop himself to deny liability on the bond.

One who signs a bond as surety conditionally may waive such condition and thus estop himself to deny liability on the bond.<sup>43</sup> Accordingly, where a surety has knowledge, actual or constructive, that the condition has not been complied with, he may be held to have waived the condition and be estopped to set it up to avoid liability on the bond,<sup>44</sup> as, where, without objection, he suffers the bond to be unconditionally delivered to the obligee<sup>45</sup> or the principal to act under the bond.<sup>46</sup>

On the other hand, where a surety has no knowledge that the condition has not been complied with, he will not be held to have waived the condition;<sup>47</sup> and where, under such circumstances, he promises to pay the creditor the amount due under the bond, it has been held not to bar the defense of violation of condition that the principal also sign the bond.<sup>48</sup> Likewise, a condition requiring other sureties is not waived by the mere failure of one surety to answer the obligee's letter relative to such other sureties<sup>49</sup> or by the fact that a surety, who has signed on such condition, tries to borrow money to pay the bond or a part of it.<sup>50</sup>

g. Notice of Condition

- (1) In general
- (2) Where instrument complete on face
- (3) Where instrument incomplete on face

(1) In General

In order that nonperformance of a condition may constitute a defense to a surety, the creditor or obligee must have notice, either actual or constructive.

Constructive notice arises and is sufficient where the obligee has knowledge of facts which would cause a reasonably prudent person to make inquiry,<sup>51</sup> as where the conditional nature of the execution is apparent either on the face of the instrument itself, as discussed infra subdivision g (3) of this section, or in connection with the attending circumstances,<sup>52</sup> as where the obligee's contract with the principal stipulates for such condition.<sup>53</sup> Notice of nonperformance of a condition that another surety also sign involves incompleteness of the instrument, and notice thereof, either actual or constructive, to the obligee.<sup>54</sup>

The absence of an acknowledgement of a bond, when required, so detracts from its facial regularity as to call for inquiry by the obligee as to whether it was signed by the surety on condition,<sup>55</sup> and entitles a surety, if sued thereon, to prove an unfulfilled condition imposed by him.<sup>56</sup>

Notice to agent. Subject to the general rules relating to notice to an agent as notice to the principal, as discussed in Agency §§ 262-274, notice of the conditions on which a surety signs a bond or note, acquired by an authorized agent of the creditor or obligee while acting within the scope of his authority, is notice to the latter.<sup>57</sup>

An infant obligee is not affected by notice of conditions prejudicial to him.<sup>58</sup>

Statutory notice. Where the bond is a statutory one, a statutory requirement of two or more sureties to the obligation operates as notice to the obligee.<sup>59</sup>

Delivery by stranger. The creditor or obligee may be held to have constructive notice if he receives the instrument from a stranger,<sup>60</sup> as where delivery is wrongfully made by one holding it in escrow.<sup>61</sup> However, the surety cannot avoid liability on this ground where the delivery is made by his agent.<sup>62</sup>

(2) Where Instrument Complete on Face

Where the instrument is complete and regular on its face, there is no duty on the obligee to inquire whether any condition has been imposed on its delivery.

Where the instrument is complete and regular on its face, there is no duty on the obligee to inquire whether any condition has been imposed on its delivery,<sup>63</sup> and the surety is not relieved from liability because of a breach of condition, unless the obligee, at the time of such delivery, has actual notice of the condition and of its violation,<sup>64</sup> or unless the attending circumstances are such as to charge him with notice thereof.<sup>65</sup> Thus, where the bond is regular on its face, and is good without the principal's signature, the obligee is not chargeable with notice that the surety's signature was made on condition that the principal should also sign before delivering the bond,<sup>66</sup> especially where the principal signs a contract imposing the same obligations.<sup>67</sup>

(3) Where Instrument Incomplete on Face

Where the instrument is so incomplete on its face as to suggest nonperformance of some condition imposed by the surety, it imputes notice to the obligee of such condition and of its violation, in which case, actual notice is not required.

Where the instrument is so incomplete on its face as to suggest nonperformance of some condition imposed by the surety, it imputes notice to the obligee of such condition and of its violation,<sup>68</sup> in which case, actual notice is not required.<sup>69</sup> However, in order that a defect on the face of a bond may serve to impute notice to the obligee, it must be of such a nature as may reasonably lead to a discovery of the real defect complained of.<sup>70</sup> Thus, notice of any conditions on which the obligee may have signed is not imputed to the obligee by the mere fact that there are more seals than signatures to a bond,<sup>71</sup> that the instrument contains the word "sureties,"<sup>72</sup> or that there are unfilled blanks.<sup>73</sup>

Failure of all persons to sign. The fact that an instrument which purports on its face to be the bond of two or more obligors is delivered to the obligee without being executed by all the persons named in the body thereof as obligors imputes notice to the obligee that the surety signing it did so on the condition that it be executed by all the parties named, either as principal or cosureties, before delivery,<sup>74</sup> and puts him on inquiry as to whether those who signed consented to its delivery without the signature of the others.<sup>75</sup> Where the bond recites a principal and sureties but the principal fails to sign, it necessitates inquiry in respect thereof.<sup>76</sup>

Erasures. A material, noticeable erasure in an instrument may be sufficient to put an obligee on notice as to a conditional signing of a surety.<sup>77</sup> The erasure, before delivery, of a name originally in the body of the bond is sufficient to put the obligee on notice as to whether the surety's signing was conditional on the signing by such person.<sup>78</sup> However, where the erasure cannot be detected without a close inspection, it is not sufficient to put the obligee on notice.<sup>79</sup>

Presumptions. The authorities are not in harmony as to whether there is a presumption that an instrument is incomplete and unfinished until it is executed by all the parties whose names appear.<sup>80</sup> Generally, no presumption arises that a bond is not to be considered binding on a surety who signs until executed by all of the obligors named in the body thereof;<sup>81</sup> but its execution is deemed prima facie complete, and it is for those who executed it to show that they were not to be bound unless it was executed by the others,<sup>82</sup> especially where the bond is a joint and several one.<sup>83</sup> Some authorities, however, hold that the presumption is that such an instrument is not to be delivered until it is signed by the obligors named, and it is incumbent on the obligee to show affirmatively that the surety who signed it dispensed with the execution of it by the other obligors named.<sup>84</sup> Further, the distinction has been made that, where the bond purports to be a joint one, the presumption is that each of the obligors named in the bond signed on the understanding that the others would also sign.<sup>85</sup>

The failure of the creditor to execute the instrument does not relieve a surety thereon, where the principal has treated it as a valid obligation.<sup>86</sup> Where the obligee is required by statute to take a bond, and the statute is substantially complied with, a slight discrepancy between his name as signed to the principal contract and as appearing on the bond does not relieve the surety from liability.<sup>87</sup>

§ 54. — Justification of Surety

The justification of a surety is no part of his undertaking, and ordinarily his mere failure to justify will not release him from liability on a bond which is accepted without such justification.

The justification of a surety is no part of his undertaking,<sup>88</sup> and ordinarily his mere failure to justify will not release him from liability on a bond which is accepted without such justification.<sup>89</sup> However, the failure to justify by one of the sureties on a joint bond, which by order of court is not to be operative until the sureties have justified, releases his cosurety,<sup>90</sup> even though the cosurety afterward agrees orally to consider himself bound.<sup>91</sup>

§ 55. Delivery

Ordinarily the bond or obligation of a surety is not of any validity until it has been properly delivered. Delivery of the bond or obligation to the obligee may be made by the surety through an agent, and the principal obligor may act as the agent of the surety for the purpose of making delivery.

While it has been held not essential to the creation of a surety relationship that the promise to pay the debt or obligation of another be directed, addressed, or delivered by the maker of the promise to any particular creditor or prospective creditor,<sup>92</sup> ordinarily the bond or obligation of a surety is not

In practice, the proceeding by which sureties establish their ability to perform the undertaking of the bond or recognizance.—Dickinson v. Smith, 120 N.W. 406, 407, 139 Wis. 1—35 C.J. p 896 note 20.

91. N.Y.—Gross v. Bouton, supra.

92. U.S.—Joe Balestrieri & Co. v. C. I. R., C.A., 177 F.2d 867.

Reason for rule

A proposal to stand as surety may of any validity until it has been properly delivered.<sup>93</sup> Thus, in the case of a surety on a note, since his obligation is to the payee or creditor,<sup>94</sup> it is of no validity until after the delivery of the note to the creditor or obligee.<sup>95</sup>

Mailing. A suretyship contract is delivered when it is deposited in the mail, directed to the obligee<sup>96</sup> or to someone, other than the surety's agent, for delivery to the obligee,<sup>97</sup> such as to the principal for his signature.<sup>98</sup>

By or to agent. Delivery of the bond or obligation to the obligee may be made by the surety through an agent,<sup>99</sup> and where the surety places a fully executed bond or obligation in the hands of an agent for use in a transaction to be consummated, without giving the agent any special instructions, he thereby authorizes its delivery to the obligee to secure any agreement coming within its terms.<sup>1</sup> The principal obligor may act as the agent of the surety for the purpose of making delivery,<sup>2</sup> and such authority may be inferred from the facts and circumstances of the case,<sup>3</sup> such as from the acts and conduct of the surety which fairly evince such an intention.<sup>4</sup> As far as the surety is concerned, his liability on the bond or obligation becomes fixed by his delivering it to the principal, with the intention that it shall become operative,<sup>5</sup> as where he places it in the office of the principal for his signature,<sup>6</sup> since this is equivalent to delivery to the obligee.<sup>7</sup>

Where the principal has possession of a bond or obligation executed by a surety, it is presumed to be rightful,<sup>8</sup> and the delivery of it by him to the obligee is binding on the surety, even without his assent,<sup>9</sup> where there is no fact or circumstance which could preclude the acceptance of it.<sup>10</sup> However, the appointment of a receiver in the meantime to take charge of the principal's affairs, because of insolvency, terminates such implied authority;<sup>11</sup> and if the bond or obligation is delivered by him thereafter it is not effective against the surety.<sup>12</sup>

Delivery of the bond or obligation may be made to an authorized agent of the creditor or obligee.<sup>13</sup>

§ 56. — Conditional Delivery

Where the bond or obligation as delivered to the obligee is subject to certain conditions, there is not a technical delivery to him. A delivery may be conditional without the use of express words to that effect.

Where the bond or obligation as delivered to the obligee is subject to certain conditions, there is not a technical delivery to him.<sup>14</sup> While a delivery may be conditional without the use of express words to that effect,<sup>15</sup> in the absence of evidence to the contrary it will be presumed that the delivery of a bond or obligation was unconditional,<sup>16</sup>

§ 57. Acceptance and Approval

- a. Acceptance
- b. Approval

a. Acceptance

In order that a surety may be bound, the suretyship bond or obligation must be duly accepted by the creditor or obligee within a reasonable time; but acceptance need not be made in a formal manner and may be implied from the circumstances.

In order that a surety may be bound, it is necessary that the suretyship bond or obligation be duly accepted by the creditor or obligee<sup>18</sup> within a reasonable time,<sup>19</sup> or, as discussed infra § 60, before the surety has signified an intention to withdraw. Acceptance, however, need not be made in a formal manner,<sup>20</sup> but may be implied from the circumstances,<sup>21</sup> as where the creditor has knowledge that one of the parties is in fact a surety<sup>22</sup> or where the principal contract stipulates for a bond and a bond is given.<sup>23</sup> Acceptance may also be implied from the fact that the principal obligor enters on the duties of the contract secured and that the obligee retains the bond or obligation without objection,<sup>24</sup> or from the fact that the agreement is delivered to the creditor and credit extended to the principal on the strength thereof.<sup>25</sup>

Acceptance and retention of the bond or obligation raise an implication of its approval; ordinarily the fact that a bond or obligation is not approved as required by law does not release the sureties from their liability thereon.

Acceptance and retention of the bond or obligation raise an implication of its approval,<sup>26</sup> but, since the approval of a statutory bond or obligation is not primarily for the benefit of the principal obligor or the sureties so much as for the protection of the obligee,<sup>27</sup> in the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary the fact that a bond or obligation is not approved as required by law does not release the sureties from their liability thereon,<sup>28</sup> nor is it necessary to such liability that the approval, when made, be indorsed on the bond.<sup>29</sup>

Where, under a statute providing that the undertaking may be in one instrument or several, an be liable if notes were not paid did not relate to delivery on condition.—Davlin v. Kowalk, 6 N.E.2d 798, 54 Ohio App. 222.

17. Va.—Webb v. Trent's Ex'r, 174 S.E. 755, 162 Va. 500.

Conditional delivery to cosurety

Sureties on bond were liable to obligee who received it from cosurety and another without notice that it was intended to be only temporary, or that it had been conditionally delivered to cosurety other than the one delivering it or that delivery was without authority and in breach of condition.—Webb v. Trent's Ex'r, supra.

50 C.J. p 43 note 67.

Notice to, and acceptance by, creditor generally see supra § 31.

Rejection

Alleged offer of sureties on bond for distributor for retail company to become sureties on note for purpose of giving distributor additional time to bring his accounts to date was rejected by letter of company disavowing note which sureties signed with understanding that another party who failed to sign would also execute note, and making another offer to the sureties, which was not accepted by them, and hence sureties were not liable on note.—W. T.

Rawleigh Co. v. Izard, Tex.Civ.App., 113 S.W.2d 620.

Return to surety for insertion of clause

Where surety bond was returned to surety company with request that there be included in the bond a forbearance clause, which surety declined to add and principal named in the bond defaulted and bond was never returned to the obligee, surety could not be held liable on the bond, since it was never accepted by the obligee.—John McShain, Inc. v. Eagle Indemnity Co., 23 A.2d 669, 180 Md. 202.

Unauthorized acceptance

An acceptance made by one without authority to do so does not bind the surety.—Hill v. Calvert, 18 S.C. Eq. 56—50 C.J. p 43 note 77.

Conclusive acceptance

The fact that a person's name is signed to a bond and that the approval of the proper official is indorsed thereon is conclusive of the acceptance of such person as surety.—Wright v. Schmidt, 47 Iowa 233.

Retention by obligee

An obligee's retention of a surety bond delivered to him is an implied acceptance of the terms of the bond.—John McShain, Inc. v. Eagle Indemnity Co., 23 A.2d 669, 180 Md. 202.

undertaking fails of approval because of the insufficiency of one of the sureties, and a separate undertaking is executed by another surety alone, he is bound, although the former undertaking has become void.<sup>30</sup> If the approval of a bond has become a matter of record, the evidence of the officer who made it is inadmissible to impeach it.<sup>31</sup> Moreover, the sureties may not question the legal qualifications of the officers who approve it.<sup>32</sup>

§ 58. — Notice of Acceptance

Even where notice to the surety is necessary in order that he may be bound, formal notice of acceptance of the bond or obligation by the creditor or obligee is considered unnecessary.

The rule that notice of acceptance must be communicated to the offeror has been held inapplicable to a surety,<sup>33</sup> and, even where it is held that notice to the surety is necessary in order that he may be bound, formal notice of acceptance of the bond or obligation by the creditor or obligee is considered unnecessary,<sup>34</sup> so that where the bond or obligation is absolute in terms and is executed contemporaneously with the contract it is intended to secure, and as a part of the same transaction, formal notice of acceptance has not been required.<sup>35</sup> Also, one who agrees to act as surety in place of a released surety may not escape liability on the ground that notice of acceptance has not been communicated to him where, after signing the agreement, he pays to the principal part of the amount secured.<sup>36</sup>

Conditional offer. Where a person offers his name as surety on certain conditions, mere performance of such conditions is not sufficient to fix the surety's liability,<sup>37</sup> but the creditor must notify him of the acceptance of the offer or of his intention to act on it,<sup>38</sup> and the proposed surety is not bound to inquire as to such acceptance.<sup>39</sup>

§ 59. — Effect of Prior Rejection

Prior rejection of the bond or obligation does not prevent a subsequent acceptance thereof, so as to bind the surety, unless the offer of suretyship is, in the meantime, revoked.

Prior rejection of the bond or obligation does not prevent a subsequent acceptance thereof, so as to bind the surety,<sup>40</sup> unless the offer of suretyship is, in the meantime, revoked;<sup>41</sup> and, where the bond is in fact accepted with his name thereon, the surety is not released from liability by the fact that he had been excepted to as being insufficient, and failed to justify,<sup>42</sup> or by the fact that additional signatures are required because of his insufficiency.<sup>43</sup> The substitution of a new surety, after exception to the original surety and his failure to justify, operates as an exoneration of the surety excepted to,<sup>44</sup> even though the exception is thereafter countermanded.<sup>45</sup>

Estoppel of principal. The principal obligor, after the bond has performed its full office, may not, as against the surety, avail himself of the fact that it had previously been rejected by the obligee.<sup>46</sup>

§ 60. Revocation before Delivery and Acceptance

A surety has the right to revoke the suretyship before the instrument is delivered and accepted.

A surety has the right to revoke the suretyship before the instrument is delivered and accepted.<sup>47</sup>

§ 61. Incomplete Instrument

A suretyship bond or obligation is void, and the surety is not liable thereon, where there is an omission of some word or words necessary to make it effective as a complete instrument.

effective as a complete instrument,<sup>48</sup> as where the name of the one who is to perform the condition of the bond is not written in the blank provided therefor,<sup>49</sup> or where a provision creating a specific liability leaves the amount or penalty blank,<sup>50</sup> or where it does not contain a general provision to answer for the default of the principal obligor.<sup>51</sup> However, the surety's liability has been held not affected by the failure of some of the persons named in the instrument to execute and sign it.<sup>52</sup> So also the surety's liability generally may not be affected by the omission of the names of localities.<sup>53</sup>

§ 62. — Filling Blanks

- a. In general
- b. By obligee

a. In General

Ordinarily, where a surety signs a bond or undertaking containing blank spaces, and intrusts it to another for use, the instrument so delivered carries on its face the implied authority to fill blanks with reasonable matter or sums necessary to perfect the instrument in general conformity to its character and nature, so as to render the surety liable thereon, provided the circumstances are such as to permit such implication of authority.

Although there is some authority to the effect that a bond or obligation signed in blank by a surety is not valid as to him where it is afterward filled up without his knowledge and authority,<sup>54</sup> and while it may not be conclusively inferred from the presence of unfilled blanks in a bond or obligation at the time of delivery that the depository thereof is authorized to fill such blanks,<sup>55</sup> ordinarily, where a surety signs a bond or undertaking containing blank spaces, and intrusts it to another for use, the instrument so delivered carries on its face the implied authority to fill blanks with reasonable matter or sums necessary to perfect the instrument in general conformity to its character and nature, so as to render the surety liable thereon, provided the circumstances are such as to permit such implication of authority.<sup>56</sup>

Where a surety intrusts a bond or obligation containing blank spaces to the principal obligor, the latter has been held to have the implied authority to fill the blanks therein<sup>57</sup> or to ratify them if filled by another;<sup>58</sup> and under this rule, where a note, with blanks therein, is signed by a surety and intrusted by him to the principal obligor, the latter has been held to have the implied authority to fill in such blanks,<sup>59</sup> such as to insert the true date of the execution of the note,<sup>60</sup> or to fill in the amount of the note,<sup>61</sup> the name of the payee,<sup>62</sup> or the place of payment.<sup>63</sup> In such cases the surety has been held to be estopped to deny his obligation, as against the obligee who receives the instrument in good faith, without knowledge that the blanks had been filled after the surety signed,<sup>64</sup> especially where the blanks are filled in accordance with his instructions.<sup>65</sup>

Exceeding authority. The surety may be bound even though the principal exceeds his authority in filling the blanks<sup>66</sup> unless the creditor has knowl-

Amount

(1) In general.—Eichelberger v. Old Nat. Bank, 3 N.E. 127, 103 Ind. 401—50 C.J. p 45 note 23 [a] (2).

(2) A surety who signs a bond in blank and intrusts it to his principal to be filled in and delivered to the obligee is bound by the instrument as delivered, although the principal, before delivery, inserts in the bond a larger penal sum than that agreed on between him and the surety, if the obligee has no notice, from the face of the bond or otherwise, of the unauthorized act of the principal.

Mass.—White v. Duggan, 2 N.E. 118, 140 Mass. 18, 54 Am.R. 437.

Miss.—Corpus Juris cited in Times-Picayune Pub. Co. v. Frierson, 144 So. 235, 236, 164 Miss. 105.

edge thereof<sup>67</sup> or unless the excess of authority amounts to fraud as against the surety.<sup>68</sup> However, the fact that the maker to whom a surety delivers a note, signed in blank by him, fills in an amount exceeding that agreed on, is an available defense to the action thereon by the payee against the surety;<sup>69</sup> and where the principal alters the amount of the original obligation as recited in the bond, to a larger amount, and inserts a still larger amount in the blank space for the amount of the surety's undertaking, the bond is not invalid, but the surety is liable only to the extent of the original obligation.<sup>70</sup>

Revocation of authority. After a surety has authorized the principal to fill blanks, he may revoke such authority before the principal acts.<sup>71</sup>

b. By Obligee

The surety is liable where the blanks in the bond or obligation are filled in by the obligee under instructions so to do; and where the instrument as delivered to the obligee contains blank spaces, the filling of which does not change the effect of the instrument, the obligee has been held to have implied authority to fill such blanks.

The surety is liable where the blanks in the bond or obligation are filled in by the obligee under instructions so to do;<sup>72</sup> and where the instrument as delivered to the obligee contains blank spaces, the filling of which does not change the effect of the instrument, the obligee has been held to have implied authority to fill such blanks<sup>73</sup> even though the surety failed to read or understand the instrument.<sup>74</sup> The surety has been held liable on the obligation so filled unless the obligee, in filling the blanks, acts in bad faith,<sup>75</sup> or unless the instrument so signed in blank was procured from the surety by fraud.<sup>76</sup>

The delivery of a surety bond or obligation to the principal with the amount of indebtedness due the creditor from the principal in blank, on the other hand, does not impliedly authorize the creditor to fill such blank and thereby convert the instrument into an account stated, as between the creditor and surety,<sup>77</sup> notwithstanding the indebtedness is, in general terms, assumed and guaranteed by the surety.<sup>78</sup>

§ 63. Consideration

The necessity and sufficiency of consideration to support a contract of suretyship are discussed infra §§ 64-69; and failure of consideration infra § 70.

§ 64. — Necessity

Ordinarily it is essential to the validity of a contract of suretyship that it be supported by a sufficient legal consideration.

Ordinarily it is essential to the validity of a contract of suretyship that it be supported by a sufficient legal consideration,<sup>79</sup> and a renewal of the surety's obligation, after he has been discharged, also requires a consideration.<sup>80</sup> On the other hand,

Stipulation authorizing writing in of amount due

in the absence of a statute to the contrary, a contract of suretyship under seal need not be shown to be supported by consideration,<sup>81</sup> especially where no consideration was contemplated by the parties.<sup>82</sup>

§ 65. — Sufficiency in General

Whatever would be sufficient as a consideration in the case of any other kind of contract ordinarily is sufficient to support a contract of suretyship.

Whatever would be sufficient as a consideration in the case of any other kind of contract ordinarily is sufficient to support a contract of suretyship.<sup>83</sup> There need not be the same consideration for the contract of the principal and the surety;<sup>84</sup> the consideration may consist of a direct payment to the surety<sup>85</sup> or of some benefit or advantage to him.<sup>86</sup> The surety's original liability as such may support his renewal thereof.<sup>87</sup> Also, a prior suretyship contract has been held sufficient consideration for a subsequent contract under which the liability sought to be imposed on the sureties is slightly less than the amount of the principal's in-

§ 66. — Indirect Consideration in General

The consideration for a suretyship contract need not move directly to the surety; it is sufficient that a valuable consideration passes between the principal and the obligee.

The consideration for a suretyship contract need not move directly from the obligee to the surety,<sup>89</sup> no direct benefit to the surety being necessary to support the contract;<sup>90</sup> it is sufficient that a valuable consideration passes between the principal and the obligee.<sup>91</sup> For example, a consideration sufficient to validate the contract between a principal and the payee of a note is sufficient to bind also the principal's surety, who joins in the execution thereof.<sup>92</sup>

§ 67. — As Affected by Time of Making Suretyship Contract

- a. Before, or at same time as, principal contract
- b. Relating to past transaction

a. Before, or at Same Time as, Principal Contract

A suretyship contract made before or at the same time as the principal contract, or one executed after the principal contract but as part of the original transaction, may be supported by the consideration moving between the obligee and the principal obligor under the principal contract.

Where a contract of suretyship is made before or at the same time as the principal contract, and both contracts form parts of the same transaction, one consideration is sufficient for both the principal and collateral contract and there need not be any consideration other than that moving between the obligee and the principal obligor under the principal contract.<sup>2</sup> Moreover, even though a suretyship contract is executed subsequently to the principal contract, it will be regarded as being made at the same time so as to constitute a part of the same transaction, and be supported by the same consideration, and not require a new consideration, where it is executed pursuant to a prior agreement and as an inducement to the execution of the principal contract,<sup>3</sup> especially where the transaction was entered into at the instance or request of the surety;<sup>4</sup> and this rule applies even though there is a delay for some time before the surety is requested to sign.<sup>5</sup>

Ordinarily the consideration which binds a surety must be executory, and where a suretyship contract is entered into after the making of, and entirely apart from, the principal contract the consideration given to the principal alone for the principal contract and already executed is regarded as a past consideration with respect to the suretyship contract.

As a general rule, the consideration which binds a surety must be executory,<sup>6</sup> and where a suretyship contract is entered into after the making of, and entirely apart from, the principal contract, the consideration given to the principal alone for the principal contract and already executed is regarded as a past consideration with respect to the suretyship contract,<sup>7</sup> and there must be a new and independent consideration to support the suretyship,<sup>8</sup> which, according to one decision on the question, consideration must be serious.<sup>9</sup>

Thus, unless there is a new consideration, of which the surety has knowledge, for his promise,<sup>10</sup> a surety is not bound where he executes a contract as surety after its delivery,<sup>11</sup> as where he signs a note as surety after its delivery to the payee.<sup>12</sup> It has been held not necessary that the consideration for the contract of a surety on a note under these circumstances shall be a new consideration paid to or by either of the parties for such signing,<sup>13</sup> but any benefit accruing to the principal or surety,<sup>14</sup> or any disadvantage to the payee,<sup>15</sup> may be sufficient.

Contract covering future transactions. Where a suretyship contract expressly covers past and future transactions, and is supported by a consideration arising out of the future transactions, it is good as to the whole.<sup>16</sup>

§ 68. — Extension of Credit to Principal

A creditor may alter his position for the worse so as to raise a sufficient consideration to support a suretyship contract by giving credit to the principal.

A creditor may alter his position for the worse so as to raise a sufficient consideration to support a suretyship contract by giving credit to the principal,<sup>17</sup> which may be done by advancing money to him.<sup>18</sup>

§ 69. — Forbearance to Principal

The performance of a promise by the creditor or obligee not to pursue or enforce a legal right which he has against the principal obligor is a sufficient consideration for a contract of suretyship, although a definite time is not agreed on; but mere forbearance is not of itself sufficient consideration.

The performance of a promise by the creditor or obligee not to pursue or enforce a legal right which he has against the principal obligor is a sufficient consideration for a contract of suretyship,<sup>19</sup> although a definite time is not agreed on.<sup>20</sup> On the other hand, mere forbearance alone is not of itself a sufficient consideration, but there must be an agreement to forbear, made by one party and accepted by the other,<sup>21</sup> which agreement may be implied from the conduct of the parties and the nature of the transaction.<sup>22</sup>

Thus a surety is bound where, in pursuance of an agreement with him, the creditor or obligee forbears to bring suit against the principal,<sup>23</sup> or grants the principal an extension of time in which to perform or pay the principal obligation,<sup>24</sup> such as by taking a note of the principal.<sup>25</sup> So the extension of an antecedent indebtedness of the principal is a sufficient consideration for the undertaking of a surety on a note renewing the indebtedness,<sup>26</sup> and the surrender of an old note is suffi-

What constitutes failure of consideration

(1) Generally.—Dunbar v. Fleisher, 20 A. 520, 137 Pa. 85—50 C.J. p 51 note 4 [a].

(2) Where consideration for sureties' agreement to pay principal's past indebtedness was that creditor would extend further credit to principal, but creditor did not extend further credit, but expressly refused it, sureties were not liable for past indebtedness.—W. T. Rawleigh Co. v. Toms, La.App., 153 So. 595.

(3) Where consideration for becoming surety for past indebtedness of another is extension of time for payment of such debt, extension of time until termination of agreement between debtor and creditor, which was terminable at any time, was no consideration for surety contract, since, in fact, no extension of time was granted.—J. R. Watkins Co. v. Jones, 131 So. 301, 171 La. 467.

(4) Contract under which alleged surety's liability was contingent on request by maker of note for a second extension was a valid contract supported by sufficient consideration, but created no liability of surety where maker never requested extension.—American Fruit Growers v. Hawkinson, 106 S.W.2d 564, 21 Tenn. App. 127.

A surety is not bound by a contract which he has signed under duress<sup>35</sup> unless he waives the duress and ratifies the contract after the duress has been removed.<sup>36</sup> Also, sureties executing a bond because of the impending publicity incident to a threat of prosecution have been held not estopped to question the validity of the bond.<sup>37</sup>

§ 73. Forgery of Surety's Signature

A contract of suretyship is void as to a person whose signature as surety has been forged.

A contract of suretyship is void as to a person whose signature as surety has been forged;<sup>38</sup> and such a person is not estopped to assert the forgery by merely withholding information with respect to it at a time when payment from the principal might have been enforced.<sup>39</sup>

§ 74. Forgery of Other Signatures

If the obligee accepts the instrument in good faith, without notice of the forgery, it is no defense to a surety that he was induced to sign an instrument on the supposition that a prior signature thereon was genuine, and

Where sureties on bond executed on demand by representative of department of insurance and banking and under threat of criminal prosecution had knowledge that they could not legally be required to execute bond in order to be entitled to sell stock of savings and loan bank, but executed the bond because of impending publicity incident to the threat of prosecution, which would have destroyed the market for the stock, and none of the stockholders had knowledge of existence of the bond or acted on it, the sureties were not estopped to question validity of the bond.—Brown v. he may be bound although the signature of the principal or of a cosurety is a forgery.

If the obligee accepts the instrument in good faith, without notice of the forgery, it is no defense to a surety that he was induced to sign an instrument on the supposition that a prior signature thereon was genuine;<sup>40</sup> he may be bound although the signature of the principal is a forgery.<sup>41</sup> Unless the creditor takes the instrument with notice of the facts,<sup>42</sup> the forgery of the signature of a cosurety will not affect the liability of a surety,<sup>43</sup> as where the forged signature is placed on the instrument after he has executed it.<sup>44</sup> So also, if the payee or obligee has accepted the instrument without notice of the forgery,<sup>45</sup> a surety will not be relieved from liability merely because he signs the instrument in the belief that the signature of a cosurety already appearing thereon is genuine, when as a matter of fact it is a forgery,<sup>46</sup> since in such a case he will be regarded as affirming the genuineness of the previous signature;<sup>47</sup> and this rule has been held to apply although the forged name is erased before delivery of the instrument.<sup>48</sup> Under some statutes, however, the liability of the remaining sureties will be proportionately diminished.<sup>49</sup>

§ 75. Fraud or Misrepresentation

- a. In general
- b. As affected by status of principal
- c. Knowledge or participation of creditor or obligee
- d. Fraud or concealment by agent of creditor or obligee

a. In General

Where a surety is induced to enter into the suretyship contract by fraud of the creditor or obligee or with his knowledge or participation, such fraud may operate to release the surety from liability on his undertaking.

General rules as to the essentials and effect of fraud apply to contracts of suretyship.<sup>50</sup> A contract of suretyship imports entire good faith and confidence between the parties with respect to the whole transaction;<sup>51</sup> and therefore, where a surety is induced to enter into the suretyship contract by fraud or fraudulent representations or concealments on the part of the creditor or obligee, or of the principal obligor or a third person, with the obligee's knowledge or participation, as to some fact or circumstance materially affecting the surety's liability, such fraud operates to release the surety from liability on his undertaking.<sup>52</sup> Where

Fraud affecting one of several contracts

Sureties for payment of principal's indebtedness for merchandise purchased by him under first of two written contracts covering successive years are liable to creditor, even if second contract was procured by false and fraudulent representations to sureties, where only transaction between creditor and principal after expiration of first year was principal's return to creditor of some goods, for which credit was given.—W. a surety is induced by fraud to enter into the suretyship contract, such fraud may entitle him to rescind the contract<sup>53</sup> and to have it canceled as far as he is concerned,<sup>54</sup> and to withdraw the security deposited with the creditor,<sup>55</sup> or, if it has been converted, to recover its value.<sup>56</sup>

Failure to make inquiry. While it has been held that negligence on the part of the surety in relying on the representations made to him and in failing to make inquiries may prevent him from asserting that he was fraudulently induced to enter into the contract,<sup>57</sup> it has also been held that a material misrepresentation of fact to a surety invalidates the suretyship contract although the surety had knowledge of facts which might have put him on inquiry.<sup>58</sup>

A surety, fraudulently induced to enter into a transaction, may take advantage of the fraud irrespective of its effect on the principal, and he may be released from the obligation although it may be binding on the principal; but he may not be discharged on the ground of fraudulent representations made to his principal unless the principal is entitled to be discharged therefor.

A surety who is induced to enter into a transaction by fraud may take advantage of the fraud irrespective of its effect on the principal,<sup>59</sup> and he may be released from the obligation although it may be binding on the principal.<sup>60</sup> Furthermore, he may rescind the contract although the principal may not elect to rescind his contract.<sup>61</sup>

On the other hand, a surety may not be discharged on the ground of fraudulent representations made to his principal<sup>62</sup> unless the principal is entitled to be discharged therefor.<sup>63</sup>

c. Knowledge or Participation of Creditor or Obligor

In order to enable a surety to avoid his contract by reason of fraudulent concealment or false statements, the creditor or obligor must have knowledge of it or be connected therewith; and in the absence of knowledge on the part of the obligor a surety may not escape liability because of an erroneous impression which he has acquired by himself.

In order to enable a surety to avoid his contract by reason of fraudulent concealment or false statements, it is essential that the creditor or obligor have knowledge of it or be connected therewith.<sup>64</sup> The surety may not avoid his obligation for fraud or fraudulent concealment as to matters of which the creditor or obligor was ignorant.<sup>65</sup> In the absence of knowledge on the part of the obligor, a surety may not escape liability because of erroneous impressions which he has acquired by himself,<sup>66</sup> such as a belief that some other person was to be the principal,<sup>67</sup> that a corporate principal was a partnership,<sup>68</sup> that prior signers would be cosureties with him,<sup>69</sup> or that the principal was not largely indebted.<sup>70</sup> However, the surety may avoid the contract unless the obligor enlightens him, where the obligor knows that the surety is executing the contract under an erroneous impression as to the facts,<sup>71</sup> such as that a note is to secure future transactions only, and not past indebtedness,<sup>72</sup>

By principal or third person. Fraud or misrepresentation practiced by the principal alone on the surety, without any knowledge or participation on the part of the creditor or obligee, in inducing the surety to enter into the suretyship contract will not affect the liability of the surety;<sup>75</sup> and this rule also applies as to fraud or misrepresentation of an unauthorized third person,<sup>76</sup> since no duty is imposed on the obligee to seek out the surety and ascertain whether he has been thus misled.<sup>77</sup> The surety, on the other hand, may avoid the contract where the obligee at the time of the execution of the contract by the surety has knowledge of such fraud or misrepresentation<sup>78</sup> or participates therein,<sup>79</sup> as where he stands by in silence and permits the principal, by fraud, to induce the surety to execute the contract,<sup>80</sup> or where he overhears enough of a conversation between the principal and surety to put him on inquiry,<sup>81</sup> or where the circumstances are such as would lead a reasonable man to believe that the principal must have used fraud, but the creditor willfully remains ignorant.<sup>82</sup>

d. Fraud or Concealment by Agent of Creditor or Oblige

A surety may avoid his contract where he has been induced to enter into it by false and fraudulent statements or representations of an agent of the obligee, within the scope of his authority, but not where such representations are not within the scope of his authority.

A surety may avoid his contract where he has been induced to enter into it by false and fraudulent statements or representations of an agent of the obligee, within the scope of his authority,<sup>83</sup> but not where such representations are not within the scope of his authority,<sup>84</sup> as where they are made by a public agent to a person about to become a surety on another officer's bond.<sup>85</sup> A surety is bound to take notice, when the principal is acting as agent for the creditor, that the authority is very limited, and the surety is liable although he relies on unauthorized fraudulent statements of the principal.<sup>86</sup>

Fraud sufficient to entitle a surety to avoid his obligation may consist of any false representation of a material fact, made with knowledge of its falsity and with intent that it shall be acted on by the surety, and except for which the relationship might not have been entered into; also a material misrepresentation of fact to the surety will avoid the contract although honestly made.

Fraud sufficient to entitle a surety to avoid his obligation may consist of any false representation of a material fact, made with knowledge of its falsity and with intent that it shall be acted on by the surety, and except for which the relationship might not have been entered into.<sup>87</sup> Moreover, if there is a material misrepresentation of fact to the surety, the suretyship contract is invalid even though the misrepresentation is made honestly or without intent to deceive,<sup>88</sup> and even though the creditor, at the time of making the representation, has no knowledge of its falsity.<sup>89</sup> A suretyship contract will not be avoided by reason of a representation which is immaterial,<sup>90</sup> or which is not justifiably relied on,<sup>91</sup> or which is a mere matter of opinion,<sup>92</sup> or which is a statement of the legal effect of his contract.<sup>93</sup>

Statement substantially true. If the statement of the obligee or creditor is substantially, although not strictly, correct, the surety is bound if there has not been any intent to mislead.<sup>94</sup>

Signing without reading or noticing contents of instrument. Where the surety is able to read and write, and no trick or artifice is used, he is liable, where he signs the contract without reading it, although he is under a misapprehension as to its terms<sup>95</sup> or although a misrepresentation has been made as to the nature or scope of the instrument.<sup>96</sup> Also, the fact that a surety is illiterate and that the contract was not read to him does not raise a presumption against the validity of the contract; fraud must be alleged and proved.<sup>97</sup> However, under some circumstances, fraudulent representations as to the contents of the contract signed by a surety will constitute a defense to him.<sup>98</sup>

b. Particular Acts or Representations

A mere statement or representation of a promissory nature by the creditor or obligee as to his intention, in order to induce a surety to sign, does not constitute such a representation as will affect the liability of the latter.

A mere statement or representation of a promissory nature by the creditor or obligee as to his intention, in order to induce a surety to sign, does not constitute such a representation as will affect the liability of the latter.<sup>99</sup> Thus a promise by the creditor to sell the principal more goods,<sup>1</sup> or to lend the principal more money,<sup>2</sup> or to take collateral security from the principal,<sup>3</sup> if broken, does not avoid the contract of suretyship on the ground of misrepresentation, since it gives the surety, at most, but a right of action for the breach.<sup>4</sup> Furthermore, if the promise be for the performance of an illegal act, the surety cannot be defrauded by it.<sup>5</sup>

principal requested him to become such,<sup>6</sup> or to make a false representation as to the principal's indebtedness,<sup>7</sup> or falsely to state that the principal is not a defaulter<sup>8</sup> or that the creditor holds collateral of the principal,<sup>9</sup> or to make a false statement as to the time of the maturity of the liabilities of the principal<sup>10</sup> or as to the consideration to be paid for the principal contract.<sup>11</sup> If a misrepresentation is made as to the amount of the liabilities of the principal for which the surety is rendering himself liable, his contract is voidable,<sup>12</sup> at least as to the excess over the amount stated to him.<sup>13</sup> Also, a surety is not bound if he is deceived as to the application to be made of the proceeds of the instrument signed by him<sup>14</sup> or as to the value of security conveyed to him.<sup>15</sup> Furthermore, a surety is not liable where he signs the contract in reliance on false representations to the effect that another surety has signed the contract and that his signature is genuine.<sup>16</sup> If the surety signs a note for the purchase of property, any fraudulent misstatement with respect to such property frees him from liability.<sup>17</sup>

A surety, on the other hand, may not claim that he is not liable because he was told that his signature was required as a matter of form<sup>18</sup> and that he did not incur any risk,<sup>19</sup> or that his liability would be temporary only<sup>20</sup> or merely nominal.<sup>21</sup> Also, a surety may not avoid liability on the ground that her signature was obtained by the false pretense that it was necessary to release certain dower rights.<sup>22</sup>

- a. In general
- b. Duty to disclose
- c. Nature of concealment
- d. As to principal's credit or solvency
- e. As to principal's default or misconduct

a. In General

Subject to the rules relating to concealment as fraud generally, if at the time a contract of suretyship is executed the obligee conceals or withholds from the surety material facts affecting the risk, which are within his knowledge and which it is his duty to disclose, whereby the surety is induced to execute the contract, it constitutes such fraud as will entitle the surety to avoid his contract.

Subject to the rules relating to concealment as fraud generally, particularly as a ground for avoiding a contract, it is a well-settled rule that, if, at the time a contract of suretyship is executed, the obligee conceals or withholds from the surety material facts affecting the risk, which are within his knowledge and which it is his duty to disclose, whereby the surety is induced to execute the contract, it constitutes such fraud as will enable the surety to avoid his contract,<sup>23</sup> especially where the

Statement absolving obligee from responsibility

Where surety asks obligee whether it knows of any outstanding liabilities on part of principal and obligee replies in the negative although the principal owes money to the obligee at such time, the surety may avoid liability on his suretyship contract because of such misrepresentation by the obligee even though surety, on making inquiry of creditor or obligee, said that reply would be held strictly private and confidential, and would not make obligee in any way responsible.—U. obligation of suretyship is entered into at the request of the person to whom the security is given.<sup>24</sup> A contract of suretyship may be avoided even though the undue concealment is not willful or intentional,<sup>25</sup> and even though it is not done with intent to deceive the surety,<sup>26</sup> or with a view to any advantage to the creditor or obligee,<sup>27</sup> provided it operates to the prejudice of the surety;<sup>28</sup> and this is true although the suretyship contract is made on a sufficient consideration.<sup>29</sup>

b. Duty to Disclose

In order that a concealment may amount to such fraud as will release a surety, there must be a duty on the part of the obligee to disclose the facts to the surety, and it is essential that he have a suitable opportunity to disclose the facts to the surety before he enters into the contract.

In order that a concealment may amount to such fraud as will release a surety, there must be a duty on the part of the obligee to disclose the facts to the surety.<sup>30</sup> If the prospective surety applies to him, before entering into the contract, for information touching the undertaking, the obligee is bound, if he assumes to answer the inquiry at all, to give full information as to all material facts known to him and unknown to the surety, which might in any manner affect the risk to be assumed or influence him in becoming a surety;<sup>31</sup> and he may do nothing to deceive or mislead the surety without vitiating the agreement.<sup>32</sup>

In absence of inquiry. In the absence of inquiry from the prospective surety, the obligee is not bound to make an entire disclosure to him of all the facts which may affect his undertaking,<sup>33</sup> and whether, in a particular case, the obligee is bound, before accepting the undertaking of the surety, and without being applied to by him for information on the subject, to inform him of facts within his knowledge which increase the risks of the undertaking depends on the circumstances of the case.<sup>34</sup> If there is nothing in the circumstances to indicate that the prospective surety is being misled or deceived, or that he is entering into the contract in ignorance of facts materially affecting its risks, the obligee is not bound to seek him out or, without being applied to, communicate to him information as to the facts within his knowledge pertaining to the risk;<sup>35</sup> but in such case the obligee may assume that the surety has obtained information for his guidance from other sources, or that he has chosen to assume the risks of the undertaking, whatever they may be.<sup>36</sup>

In the absence of inquiry, the surety is not entitled to information which, by reasonable diligence, is as accessible to him as to the creditor or obligee,<sup>37</sup> and his ignorance will not excuse him,<sup>38</sup>

Ill.—Swisher v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 164 Ill.App. 243.

50 C.J. p 56 note 1.

Reasons for rule

(1) A surety must protect himself and ascertain risks he is incurring and cannot, by his neglect, throw burden on creditor or obligee to inform him concerning matters which surety could easily ascertain for himself.—Couch v. Stout, 107 S.W.2d 351, 194 Ark. 385.

(3) One asked to become a surety should exercise reasonable diligence to know the circumstances of the transaction and, if put on guard by the circumstances, should make inquiry.—Larmore v. People's State Bank, 188 N.E. 317, 206 Ind. 66.

38. Ky.—Sebald v. Citizens' Deposit

even though the facts are not known generally,<sup>39</sup> unless the obligee uses some deceit or trick to throw the surety off his guard and thereby prevent an investigation.<sup>40</sup> The fact that security is called for after the time for the performance of the principal contract should make the surety alert.<sup>41</sup> Where the surety delivers a fully executed bond to the principal with authority to deliver it on certain general conditions, which are met, he may not thereafter complain that the terms of the actual agreement between the principal and obligee were not more fully disclosed.<sup>42</sup>

Where the obligee knows, or has good grounds for believing, that the surety is being deceived or misled, or that he is being induced to enter into the contract in ignorance of facts materially increasing the risks, of which the obligee has knowledge, and he has a reasonable opportunity, before accepting his undertaking, to inform him of such facts, good faith and fair dealing demand that he should make such disclosure to the surety,<sup>43</sup> as where material facts exist, and are known to the obligee, of a character which the surety may reasonably assume do not exist.<sup>44</sup>

Opportunity to disclose. In order to charge an obligee with fraudulent concealment, it is essential that he have a suitable opportunity to disclose the facts to the surety before he enters into the contract;<sup>45</sup> and hence a surety is not released because of the obligee's failure to disclose facts of which he acquires knowledge after the contract is executed,<sup>46</sup> although before the execution of a substitute contract.<sup>47</sup> If the surety is absent, so that no direct communication can be had with him, the obligee has been held to be under no duty to search him out and inform him of the risks of the

A concealment or nondisclosure sufficient to avoid a contract of suretyship and operate as a release of a surety must be a material and inducing concealment; but the doctrine that fraudulent concealments as to material matters are equivalent to the affirmation of a fact which does not exist applies strictly in favor of sureties.

A concealment or nondisclosure sufficient to avoid a contract of suretyship and operate as a release of a surety must be a material or inducing concealment.<sup>49</sup> It must be, and it is sufficient when it is, a concealment of some fact known to the obligee and unknown to the surety, which bears on the particular transaction to which the suretyship attaches, and materially affects or increases the surety's risk or liability to his prejudice,<sup>50</sup> and which, if known, would influence the surety with respect to entering into the contract.<sup>51</sup> It has been regarded as improper concealment not to disclose the fact that the principal refused to allow application to be made for the signature of the surety<sup>52</sup> or that an agent of the creditor was also a partner in the firm which was the principal,<sup>53</sup> or not to disclose a separate agreement modifying the contract.<sup>54</sup>

As fraudulent representation. The doctrine that fraudulent concealments as to material matters are equivalent to the affirming of a fact which does not exist applies strictly in favor of sureties.<sup>55</sup> It has been held that, in order to release a surety, the concealment must be such as to amount to an implied fraudulent representation.<sup>56</sup>

Immaterial concealment. A surety is not released from liability by a failure to disclose to him immaterial matters which would not prejudicially affect him or increase his responsibility.<sup>57</sup> For example, the surety may not avoid his contract because of the obligee's failure to disclose information as to the personal habits of the principal,<sup>58</sup> or as to all of his dealings with the principal,<sup>59</sup> or the manner in which he will proceed to enforce the contract,<sup>60</sup> or as to facts which would prevent the principal from performing illegal acts.<sup>61</sup> Arrangements for the payment of interest to or by the principal,<sup>62</sup> or the time of its payment,<sup>63</sup> need not be disclosed.

Distinct transaction. Unless inquired of by the surety,<sup>64</sup> the obligee need not disclose facts not directly connected with the transaction to which the suretyship attaches,<sup>65</sup> or matters not connected with the subject of the contract,<sup>66</sup> although they might have a decided influence on the surety in determining whether he would enter into the contract.<sup>67</sup> Where one stands surety for an employee, the employer-obligee is not obliged to mention the fact that the predecessor of the employee was a defaulter, since it in no way increases or relates to the obligations assumed by the surety.<sup>68</sup>

d. As to Principal's Credit or Solvency

An obligee usually need not, in the absence of a request therefor, give information to the surety concerning the general credit or solvency of the principal.

Under the general rules already considered, an obligee usually is under no duty, in the absence of a request therefor, to give information to the surety concerning the general credit or solvency of the principal,<sup>69</sup> or to disclose to him the indebtedness of the principal,<sup>70</sup> or that a judgment has been obtained against him,<sup>71</sup> or that his property is about to be sold under attachment,<sup>72</sup> or that he is insolvent.<sup>73</sup>

unless the obligee knows that the surety is prompted to execute the contract under a misapprehension as to the principal's indebtedness.<sup>74</sup>

On the other hand, where an obligee or creditor undertakes to give a proposed surety information as to the principal's credit or financial condition, he is bound to disclose all the circumstances affecting the surety's risk.<sup>75</sup>

e. As to Principal's Default or Misconduct

(2) Knowledge by creditor or surety

(1) In General

Ordinarily where an obligee takes a bond as security for an agent or employee, who, to the knowledge of the obligee, has previously been guilty of defaults or misconduct involving a want of integrity, and the obligee does not disclose such facts to the surety, he is guilty of a fraudulent concealment of material facts.

Ordinarily, where an obligee takes a bond as security for an agent or employee, who, to the knowledge of the obligee, has previously been guilty of defaults or misconduct involving a want of integrity, and the obligee does not disclose such facts to the surety, he is guilty of a fraudulent concealment of material facts, the disclosure of which good faith requires, and he may not recover of the surety,<sup>76</sup> even though such default may have occurred in the service of another than the obligee.<sup>77</sup> However, in the absence of inquiry by the surety, it has been held that an obligee is under no duty to disclose prior defaults or irregularities of the principal,<sup>78</sup> especially where the bond is not executed on the solicitation of the obligee.<sup>79</sup>

Payee of note

With respect to the duty to disclose past misconduct to a prospective surety, the relationship as between a payee and surety on a note ordinarily is not considered to be the same as that existing between a surety and beneficiary of a bond.—Larmore v. People's State Bank, 188 N.E. 317, 206 Ind. 66.

77. Minn.—Capital Fire Ins. Co. v. Watson, 79 N.W. 601, 76 Minn. 387, 77 Am.S.R. 657. 50 C.J. p 59 note 50.

79. Wis.—Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Mabbett, 18 Wis. 667.

Unless the bond covers loss by negligence or errors,<sup>80</sup> the rule does not apply where the undisclosed acts or defaults consist of mere irregularities or omissions of duty which are consistent with honesty,<sup>81</sup> such as that the principal had failed to account<sup>82</sup> or to remit promptly,<sup>83</sup> or that he had intermingled his funds with those of his employer.<sup>84</sup> In accordance with the general rules, however, where a prospective surety for an employee applies to the employer obligee for information as to the employee's previous conduct, it is the duty of the obligee to make a full disclosure of all material facts within his knowledge bearing on the risk.<sup>85</sup>

(2) Knowledge by Creditor or Surety

Nondisclosure of prior defaults or misconduct on the part of the principal does not constitute fraudulent concealment where the obligee is ignorant or has merely constructive notice thereof, even though a failure by the obligee to discover its defaults was the result of negligence in not examining the accounts of the principal, unless such negligence was gross.

Nondisclosure of prior defaults or misconduct on the part of the principal does not constitute fraudulent concealment where the obligee is ignorant<sup>86</sup> or has merely constructive notice<sup>87</sup> thereof, even though a failure by the obligee to discover its defaults was the result of negligence in not examining the accounts of the principal,<sup>88</sup> unless such negligence was gross<sup>89</sup> or the obligee willfully abstained from an investigation after having a belief, founded on reasonable and reliable information, that the principal was a defaulter.<sup>90</sup> So also, nondisclosure of such defaults is no defense where the surety has knowledge thereof<sup>91</sup> or where the surety had no knowledge of the previous employment and hence could not have relied on an implied representation of the principal's worthiness.<sup>92</sup>

Knowledge by agent. Knowledge of a prior default of the principal, to agents of the obligee, at the time a surety executes a bond making himself liable therefor, generally will prevent an action being maintained thereon;<sup>93</sup> but knowledge by a public agent of prior defaults of a public officer at the time of the execution or approval of such officer's bond will not affect the liability of sureties thereon.<sup>94</sup>

§ 78. Mistake

A surety is not bound where there is a mutual mistake as to a material fact, without any fault or negligence on his part.

A surety is not bound where there is a mutual mistake as to a material fact, without any fault or negligence on his part.<sup>95</sup> However, in the absence of fraud or duress, a surety may not be relieved from liability merely because he executed by mistake an instrument different from the one intended,<sup>96</sup> or because of a clerical error which could not have misled him<sup>97</sup> or affected his liability;<sup>98</sup> nor may he avoid liability on a bond executed by him under a misapprehension as to the necessity for the bond, where his misapprehension is caused by his own carelessness.<sup>99</sup> If he is able to read, he is bound, although he signs the instrument as surety without reading it or knowing the contents thereof,<sup>1</sup> since it is not necessary that a person signing as surety shall know the terms of the principal agreement.<sup>2</sup>

Equitable relief. If the contract cannot be enforced against a surety according to its obvious intent, a court of equity may reform it.<sup>3</sup>

§ 79. Illegality

An illegal suretyship contract is not enforceable against the surety, except that, where the contract is only partially illegal, the surety's liability may continue as to the residue.

As in the case of contracts in general, an illegal suretyship contract is not enforceable against the surety,<sup>4</sup> except that, where the contract is only partially illegal, the surety's liability may continue as to the residue.<sup>5</sup>

§ 80. Capacity or Qualifications of Surety

A surety is not bound by his obligation, where at the time of entering into it he is incompetent to contract, even though the obligee had no knowledge of the surety's incapacity or incompetency, and acted in good faith.

Subject to the rules relating to capacity to contract in general, a surety is not bound by his obligation, where at the time of entering into it he is not of sufficient mental capacity to make the contract,<sup>6</sup> or where he is incompetent so to contract by reason of his personal interest in the subject of the contract;<sup>7</sup> and these rules apply even though the obligee had no knowledge of the surety's incapacity or incompetency,<sup>8</sup> and acted in good faith.<sup>9</sup> In the absence of fraud or misrepresentation, a surety, however, is not released by the incapacity of a co-surety;<sup>10</sup> nor, in case of a note to a corporation, is the surety on such note released by the fact that he was a director of such corporation.<sup>11</sup> Weakness of capacity on the part of the surety, and the fact that it is a contract of suretyship, may be considered on the question of fraud in procuring the contract.<sup>12</sup>

A partner may not become a surety on an obligation executed by his firm as principal, since he would be acting as both principal and surety at one and the same time, in the same obligation, and for the same liability.<sup>13</sup>

An unmarried woman has been held capable of becoming a personal surety for another.<sup>14</sup>

Statutory qualification. A statutory provision as to the qualifications of a surety must be substantially complied with;<sup>15</sup> but a person who has become a surety may not plead his lack of legal qualification as a defense.<sup>16</sup> A provision making it unlawful for a certain person to become indorser for any other person does not prohibit him from acting as surety.<sup>17</sup>

§ 81. Alteration of Contract before Execution or Delivery

A surety may be entitled to avoid the suretyship contract because of a material alteration of the contract by the principal before its delivery to the obligee.

A surety by handing the suretyship contract to the principal to deliver to the obligee does not confer actual or apparent authority on the principal to alter the instrument;<sup>18</sup> and therefore a material alteration of the suretyship contract by or with the consent of the principal, before its delivery to the obligee, renders the contract void as against a surety who has signed it before such alteration<sup>19</sup> unless the subsequent alteration is made by his authority or with his consent;<sup>20</sup> and this rule has been held to apply whether or not the obligee had notice of such alteration.<sup>21</sup> A surety is also released where a material alteration is made by the obligee after the delivery of the instrument to him but before the terms of the contract are agreed on.<sup>22</sup> A surety, however, is not released where the alteration is made by the surety himself without the obligee's knowledge or consent<sup>23</sup> or where the surety, by his negligence in leaving spaces in the instrument, has enabled the alteration to be made.<sup>24</sup>

Alteration before execution. A material alteration of the contract by or with the consent of the principal does not render it void as to a surety who thereafter signs it,<sup>25</sup> except that, where the contract is void as to sureties who signed before the alteration, it is also void as to a surety who signs thereafter on the faith of the previous signers being cosureties, and without notice of the alteration, which renders the contract void as to them.<sup>26</sup>

A material change in the principal contract, after the surety has executed the bond, and before the creditor has executed the principal contract, releases the surety,<sup>27</sup> but not where such change is made before the bond is signed, of which fact the surety has notice.<sup>28</sup>

§ 82. — Erasure of Names

A bond or note is void as to a surety who signs on condition or in reliance on other signers being bound thereby as principal or cosureties, where the names of one or more of such other signers are erased without his knowledge or consent.

A bond or note is void as to a surety who signs on condition or in reliance on other signers being bound thereby as principal or cosureties, where, after he has signed, the names of one or more of such other signers are erased without his knowledge or consent,<sup>29</sup> notwithstanding the one whose name is so erased afterward resigns the instrument;<sup>30</sup> and such a bond or note is also void as against a surety who, without knowledge thereof, signs after the erasure.<sup>31</sup> If such erasure is made after the instrument has been signed by all the sureties but before its delivery or approval, as a general rule all of the sureties who did not know of or consent thereto, or ratify it, are released,<sup>32</sup> notwithstanding the different sureties are charged with separate and limited liabilities,<sup>33</sup> although the instrument is still binding on the principal.<sup>34</sup> Such erasure, however, will not release a surety who had previously signed the instrument without reference to the signature by the surety whose name was erased<sup>35</sup> or who knows of, and consents to, the erasure;<sup>36</sup> nor will such an erasure release a surety who signs after the erasure with knowledge thereof.<sup>37</sup> It has also been held that the erasure of the name of a surety from a note does not release the other sureties from liability thereon as against an innocent payee,<sup>38</sup> since, in the absence of knowledge or notice to the contrary, the payee may presume that such erasure was made with the consent of the other sureties.<sup>39</sup>

Erasure from power of attorney. Where the sureties all sign a power of attorney, authorizing a public official to sign their names to a bond, but, before delivery to such official, one or more of their signatures are erased, all of the cosureties who did not know of, or consent to, such erasure are released.<sup>40</sup>

Although there are defects or objections affecting the validity or enforceability of the contract of suretyship, a surety may waive, or be estopped to assert, such defects or objections in avoidance of liability on the suretyship contract.

Although there are defects or objections affecting the validity or enforceability of the contract of suretyship, a surety may waive his right to take advantage of such objections or defects,<sup>41</sup> or he may, by his acts or conduct, be estopped to assert such defects or objections in avoidance of liability on the suretyship contract.<sup>42</sup> In accordance with the rule that a surety is estopped by the material recitals in his bond or obligation, a surety in a written undertaking may be estopped to assert a defect, irregularity, or objection in denial of any material recital in his obligation,<sup>43</sup> unless such recital was inserted under a mistake of fact,<sup>44</sup> particularly where the obligation has been acted on and has accomplished the purpose for which it was given.<sup>45</sup> A surety may be estopped to assert a different date from that recited in the bond or obligation,<sup>46</sup> that the bond or obligation was given without consideration,<sup>47</sup> that the proceedings in which it was given were irregular,<sup>48</sup> that the necessary preliminary steps were not taken,<sup>49</sup> or that it was intended that he should be under no liability.<sup>50</sup>

On the other hand, a surety may not be estopped by the recitals of the bond or obligation to question the legality of its execution,<sup>51</sup> or to deny that he had executed the instrument,<sup>52</sup> even though he is otherwise estopped by statute to deny its validity.<sup>53</sup> Also, an equitable estoppel in favor of surety does not arise from a misstatement of facts as to his liability unless he is injured or prejudiced thereby.<sup>54</sup>

Ignorance of legal effect. If the surety has full knowledge of the facts at the time he executes the undertaking, he is estopped to assert that he did so under a misapprehension or in ignorance of the legal effect<sup>55</sup> or as to the legal effect of the undertaking.<sup>56</sup>

Obtaining benefit or protecting self. Where a surety treats the contract as valid for the purpose of obtaining a personal benefit for himself, he afterward may not be permitted to deny his liability to the creditor or obligee;<sup>57</sup> but he may not be estopped to deny his obligation simply because he has taken steps to protect himself in event of a failure of his defense.<sup>58</sup>

Compliance with, and validity of, statute. A surety who voluntarily signs a bond or obligation is estopped to set up, as a defense, that certain statutory provisions as to its execution were not complied with,<sup>59</sup> such as by his failure to justify;<sup>60</sup> nor may he question the validity of the statute under which the bond or obligation was given.<sup>61</sup>

Official bond. A surety on an official bond has been held to be estopped to deny that his principal is a particular officer, as recited in the bond,<sup>62</sup> or that the bond is an official bond;<sup>63</sup> and he may not be permitted to dispute the official's appointment or election, as being irregular or illegal,<sup>64</sup> that he was ineligible,<sup>65</sup> that he never took the oath of office,<sup>66</sup> that his bond was not approved by the proper authority,<sup>67</sup> or that his appointment was annulled.<sup>68</sup>

b. By Silence or Acquiescence

Where a surety, with knowledge of the facts, remains silent while the contract is being acted on by the principal and obligee, he may be estopped afterward to set up various defenses relating to the validity and enforceability of the contract.

Where a surety, with knowledge of the facts, fails to object at the proper time and remains silent while the contract is being acted on by the principal and obligee, he may be estopped afterward to set up the defense of failure of consideration,<sup>69</sup> uncertainty of contract,<sup>70</sup> that he did not execute the contract,<sup>71</sup> or fraud.<sup>72</sup> Thus, where a surety acquires knowledge or notice of the fraud by which he was induced to execute the obligation,<sup>73</sup> he may be estopped to set up such fraud as a defense, where he fails, within a reasonable time after such knowledge is acquired, to avail himself thereof as a ground for avoiding liability;<sup>74</sup> and where he thereafter gives a collateral note it operates as a waiver of the fraud,<sup>75</sup> but this does not bind him to a new contract not within the terms of the first agreement.<sup>76</sup>

tion, a surety who, without objection, obligates himself to secure performance of such contract or obligation is estopped to assert its invalidity,<sup>77</sup> or to deny that it was entered into<sup>78</sup> or became operative;<sup>79</sup> and, where faith and credit have been given to the surety's obligation, he may not invoke immaterial variances and departures from the principal contract,<sup>80</sup> particularly where he has expressly waived the mistake in the contract and corrected it in the bond.<sup>81</sup>

c. By Contracting as Principal

Where one who in fact is a surety by express terms obligates himself as a principal, he thus waives the rights accruing to him as a surety.

Where one who in fact is a surety by express terms obligates himself as a principal, he thus waives the rights accruing to him as a surety,<sup>82</sup> and ordinarily is estopped to set up a defense that he signed merely as surety.<sup>83</sup> Thus, where he contracts in terms as "principal," he is estopped to assert that he is merely a surety, and he may be held as a principal,<sup>84</sup> unless he has added the word "surety" to his signature.<sup>85</sup> However, a waiver of the rights of sureties may not be effected by several persons merely signing a bond or obligation by which they agree to become jointly and severally bound without designating which are principals and which are sureties;<sup>86</sup> and if they are described in the contract as sureties it must appear from other parts thereof that they agreed to be bound as principals before it may be said that they waived any of their rights as sureties.<sup>87</sup>

A complaint for the cancellation of a suretyship contract must be sufficient to warrant the relief sought.

A complaint for the cancellation of a contract of suretyship must be sufficient to warrant the relief sought,<sup>88</sup> and this rule has been applied to a complaint based on the invalidity of the principal contract.<sup>89</sup>

IV. NATURE OF LIABILITY OF SURETY

§ 87. In General

The surety's obligation is primary, original, and direct, and is generally the same as that of the principal.

The surety's obligation is primary,<sup>90</sup> original,<sup>91</sup> and direct.<sup>92</sup> It has been said to be contractual,<sup>93</sup> and legal, as distinguished from moral.<sup>94</sup> The liability of a surety<sup>95</sup> or of a supplemental surety<sup>96</sup>

to the creditor or obligee is absolute or generally the same as that of the principal, even though the relationship be known to the creditor.<sup>97</sup> The contract of the surety, being to pay or perform if the principal does not, is executory until the surety has actually paid or performed.<sup>98</sup>

as a party to the paper corresponds to that of his principal toward holders of the paper;<sup>99</sup> and the fact that a signer is a surety does not diminish his liability to the holder of the instrument.<sup>1</sup> Thus a surety for the drawer is liable as drawer,<sup>2</sup> and a surety for the maker is liable as maker.<sup>3</sup> As far as the holder of the bill or note is concerned, the liability of a surety is a "primary" liability as distinguished from a "secondary" liability, and this is so within the meaning of those terms as used in the Negotiable Instruments Law.<sup>4</sup> Accommodation parties are liable in the capacity assumed by them.<sup>5</sup> As between the principal debtor and the surety on a note, the obligation of surety is collateral to that of the principal debtor, and his liability is secondary.<sup>6</sup> Where there are several sureties on a note, they are equally bound to pay a judgment thereon.<sup>7</sup> The surety is not, however, a fiduciary to the payee,<sup>8</sup> and is not liable to the party accommodated.<sup>9</sup> Where the makers sign a note as collateral for another's obligation to collect the original notes, their liabilities are controlled by the law of suretyship and not the Negotiable Instruments Law.<sup>10</sup> Where a surety on a note knows that another was to sign it, he is liable, although without actual knowledge that such other had signed.<sup>11</sup>

V. SCOPE AND EXTENT OF LIABILITY OF SURETY AS TO CREDITOR OR OBLIGEE

§ 90. In General

Where a person agrees to exonerate another from a basic obligation, he may become merely a surety in respect thereof. Where the surety on a building and construction contract assumes performance of it on the builder's default, he becomes subject to the liabilities of the builder on the contract.

Where a person agrees to exonerate another from a basic obligation, he may become merely a surety in respect thereof.<sup>19</sup> If the surety of a treasurer of a beneficial or fraternal society joins in an additional bond because the amount in the treasurer's hands exceeds the amount allowed to remain there by the by-laws, he cannot defeat his liability because the by-laws require the treasurer to have in his possession a sum not exceeding a certain amount, and a bond for that amount has been given.<sup>20</sup>

Building and construction contracts. Where the surety on a building and construction contract assumes performance of it on the builder's default, he becomes subject to the liabilities of the builder

on the contract<sup>21</sup> without reference to the amount he signed for as surety,<sup>22</sup> and may thereby become liable for any indebtedness created prior to such undertaking.<sup>23</sup> In so doing, it is the surety's duty to complete the work as reasonably as possible, and without profit to himself.<sup>24</sup> Where the surety completes the contract and the owner suffers no loss thereby, there is no further liability to the owner by the surety.<sup>25</sup> Where the surety authorizes another to complete the contract, he will be liable for the work done thereafter,<sup>26</sup> but it must be shown that such party acted as the agent of the surety.<sup>27</sup>

§ 91. Limitation by Terms of Contract in General

The liability of a surety is measured by the terms of his contract, and, while he is liable to the full extent thereof, such liability is strictly limited to that assumed by its terms.

The liability of a surety is measured by his contract,<sup>28</sup> and, whether he is a gratuitous or com-

No estoppel to assert defenses

Sureties on a building contractor's bond are not estopped to deny liability where the contractor abandoned the work because they appropriated material he left, selling it and appropriating the proceeds, or because they requested the owner not to sue on the bond until they could see "what could be done about getting things in shape to go on with the building," or because they acquired property of the contractor's wife, under an agreement to apply it to the completion of the work, even though the sureties' acts may have been tortious toward the contractor.—School Dist. of Village of Barfield v. #### Similar statements of rule

(1) A surety's liability is always measured by the express terms of his covenant, the obligations of his principal as defined by the state statutes, and the conditions of the bond.—Tucker v. Brown, 150 P.2d 604, 20 Wash.2d 740.

(2) Liability of bondsman is measured by his covenant, condition, and statutes relating to bond and to duties of principal.—Swanberg v. National Surety Co., 283 P. 761, 86 Mont. 340.

Invalid supplemental contract between parties did not change liability of surety on original contract.—American Fruit Growers v. Hawkinson, 106 S.W.2d 564, 21 Tenn.App. 127.

Statutory bond

(1) Scope of surety's obligation under statutory bond is prescribed by statute in compliance with which bond is given and by language employed in bond defining obligation.—Home Indemnity Co. v. State of Missouri, C.C.A.Mo., 78 F.2d 391.

(2) Scope of surety's undertaking is measured by bond and statutes applicable when it is executed, and there can be no expansion of scope of undertaking by subsequent statutory changes.—Hochevar v. Maryland Casualty Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 114 F.2d 948.

Consideration

The liability of a surety is not affected by the fact that the consideration for the contract may take one of several forms, or that it may or may not be recited in the instrument.—J. R. Watkins Co. v. Beyer, 233 N.W. 442, 203 Wis. 397, 71 A.L.R. 1268.

Waiver by creditor

(1) With respect to liability of surety, owner may waive contract requiring changes to be authorized in writing.—Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co. v. Lentz, 9 P.2d 408, 40 Ariz. 46.

(2) Oblige of bond for completion of building was entitled to rely on provision that only written waiver or release of any default or omission of principal should be binding.—Prudence Co. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, C.C.A.N.Y., 77 F.2d 834, modified on other grounds 56 S.Ct. 387, 297 U.S. 198, 80 L.Ed. 581, motion denied 56 S.Ct. 679, amended 56 S.Ct. 935, 298 U.S. 642, 80 L.Ed. 1374.

(3) Provision in bond for completion of building that only written waiver or release of any default or omission of principal should be binding on obligee could be waived by parol agreement of officer having authority to bind obligee.—Prudence Co. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, supra.

Statutory bond

(1) Where bond is by its terms more comprehensive than required by statute, surety is liable to full extent of bond.—Zelev. Industrial Commission of Utah, 128 P.2d 751, 102 Utah 164.

(2) On the other hand, surety's liability under statutory bond has been held to be measured by statute requiring bond, and additions to bond not required by statute are void and may be treated as surplusage.—State ex rel. Dyer v. Francis, 54 P.2d 297, 152 Or. 448.

Surety on lease

Surety bond conditioned on lessee's taking possession and establishing regular business as provided in lease covered not only failure to take possession, but also failure to pay rent, taxes and insurance.—American Surety Co. of New York v. Hutchinson, C.C.A.Tex., 63 F.2d 536.

to rely on the strict letter thereof.<sup>39</sup> He will, however, be chargeable with notice of the terms of the instrument which he undertakes to secure.<sup>40</sup>

Sureties for one person are not liable for an association of several persons of which such individual is a member,<sup>41</sup> or a firm including such person;<sup>42</sup> and, conversely, sureties for several are not liable for an individual.<sup>43</sup> The liability of a surety for one or more principals does not extend to acts performed by such principals jointly with others.<sup>44</sup> Where a statute provides that a bond or undertaking in actions or special proceedings shall continue in force after a change or addition of parties, its effect is merely to preserve unimpaired the liability in favor of the party for whom the undertaking was originally given, and not to include the party substituted or added.<sup>45</sup>

The surety on a building or construction contract is bound only in the manner and to the extent provided in the obligation,<sup>46</sup> and the principal cannot by his acts bind the surety beyond the obligations assumed.<sup>47</sup>

§ 92. Liability of Principal as Measure of Surety's Liability

In the absence of limitations or restrictions contained in the contract, the liability of the surety is coextensive with that of the principal.

In the absence of limitations or restrictions contained in the contract, the liability of the surety is coextensive with that of the principal.<sup>48</sup> While it has been said that the liability of the surety can

Liability for fraud of principal

In fixing surety's liability for principal's fraud, as long as surety keeps aloof from conduct of trust, faithful administration of which surety guarantees, and seeks no personal profit, he may stand on terms of his bond and, if he participates in fraud, he may become equally liable with the principal.—*Cone v. ### Special guaranty

Where a building contractor's bond contained no words of limitation indicating that the surety depended on the faithfulness of the obligee or reposed any trust in him, but expressly recited that the principal and the obligee had entered into a written contract by which the former agreed to construct the building in question for plaintiff, the bond did not import a special guaranty.—Wing & Bostwick Co. v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., C.C. N.Y., 150 F. 672.

Repair and construction bonds distinguished

Liability under bond conditioned on performance of contract is foreclosed by good-faith conclusion and agreement that work has been done as per specifications, while under guarantee of completed work for given period liability attaches for mistakes, oversights, and fraud in original acceptance, and for hidden and future developing defects.—*Sioux City v. Provision in performance bond that any amendment of contract, including failure of buyer to exercise any rights thereunder, should not release principal and surety from liability, meant that if buyer and seller by agreement amended contract, or if seller led buyer to believe that seller had waived his rights under section of contract defining buyer's remedy for defective materials, surety should be liable under bond, and surety's liability on the bond was still measured by the principal's rights and obligations under the contract as originally executed.—*De Witt v. tion of this doctrine to the matter of interest, costs, and attorney's fees is discussed infra §§ 113-115. If the amount of the penalty is insufficient to satisfy all claims, it should be apportioned.<sup>55</sup> The rule applies to sureties who have bound themselves severally for certain amounts.<sup>56</sup> Sureties, although not liable beyond the penalty as to some persons, may be liable beyond it as to others, if the bond so provides.<sup>57</sup>

Where a bond is furnished under a statute providing that any person who may be damaged by the wrongful act of the principal shall have a right of recovery on the bond for all damages not exceeding a designated sum, or under a statute containing similar provisions, it has been held that the aggregate recovery of several claimants cannot exceed the penalty thereof.<sup>58</sup> In at least one jurisdiction, however, where a bond has been furnished under such a statute, and there are several claimants against the surety, it has been held that each claimant may recover to the full extent of the bond, although the combined recovery may exceed the penalty named in the bond,<sup>59</sup> and notwithstanding a provision in the bond that the total liability of the surety should not exceed the statutory amount.<sup>60</sup>

§ 94. Conditions of Liability in General

Since a surety's liability is measured by the terms of his contract, his liability will be measured by the conditions stated in the bond.

Since a surety's liability is measured by the terms of his contract, his liability will be measured by the conditions stated in the bond.<sup>61</sup> The surety is not liable for the breach of conditions the performance of which he has not secured,<sup>62</sup> even though thereby the obligation secured is released.<sup>63</sup> If the surety has indicated the manner in which the indebtedness for which he has undertaken to become liable shall be incurred, he is not liable for indebtedness incurred in another way.<sup>64</sup>

Notice of ability to perform

Surety on subcontractor's bond, rather than contractor, was chargeable with notice of the integrity of subcontractor and its ability to perform.—Glens Falls Indem. Co. v. Basich Bros. Const. Co., C.C.A.Cal., 165 F.2d 649, certiorari denied 68 S. Ct. 1347, 334 U.S. 833, 92 L.Ed. 1760.

curing possession of a mortgage on the property and selling the property at a foreclosure sale.<sup>78</sup> Where the contract makes the final certificate of the architect conclusive evidence of performance, and he gives such certificate without fraud or gross negligence, no action can be maintained on the contractor's bond for using inferior materials.<sup>79</sup> Where the contractor agrees to complete work by a certain day or to pay a certain sum as liquidated damages, and the surety on his bond agrees to protect the obligee from all loss arising from the non-fulfillment of the covenants of the contractor, and there is delay in completing the work, the surety as well as the contractor is bound to pay the amount fixed as liquidated damages without any proof of actual loss.<sup>80</sup> Where the surety consents to compromise an agreement between the owner and the contractor and subsequently approves its repudiation by the contractor, the surety can be held for the breach of the original contract.<sup>81</sup>

§ 96. Performance of Contract or Conditions by Creditor

As a general rule a creditor can hold a surety to his contract only by strictly complying with the contract.

As a general rule a creditor can hold a surety to his contract only by strictly complying with the contract.<sup>82</sup> A surety will not be held liable on a bond where there is an obligation, untendered and unperformed on the part of the creditor, which is precedent to, or at least concurrent with, the surety's obligation.<sup>83</sup> The creditor is under no duty, however, to perform a condition in the bond which he is under no obligation to do,<sup>84</sup> as where the performance of a condition in the bond is optional with the creditor.<sup>85</sup> A creditor is under no obligation to perform a condition which does not appear in the contract between him and the principal, although it may appear in the bond.<sup>86</sup>

Certificate of architect

(1) Where, before completion of a building, the contractor abandoned the work, the certificate of the architect with respect to certain work, required by the contract, and necessary to be done before the building could be used, was not essential to a recovery on the contractor's bond.—Jenkins v. American Surety Co. of New York, 88 P. 1112, 45 Wash. 573.

(2) Where a building contract, authorizing the owner to complete the work on the contractor's default, further provided that the expense incurred by the owner should be audited and certified by the architect, whose certificate should be conclusive, but the contractor's bond provided that the surety should not be liable to any action instituted later than a specified date, and the building had not been completed on that date, and a certificate covering all of the items could not therefore be produced, and the specific objection that no certificate was presented was not made, the failure to produce the certificate did not bar recovery against the surety.—Cowles v. J. C. Mardis Co., 181 N.W. 872, 192 Iowa 890.

(3) A contract between a contractor, for the erection of a building, and a subcontractor giving the contractor the right to complete the work in case of the subcontractor's failure to do so, and containing a provision that the contractor might take charge of and complete the work if the architect should certify that the default of the subcontractor was sufficient ground for such completion, did not cover a situation where the subcontractor abandoned the work, and in such case the contractor without any certificate of the architect was entitled to complete the work, and recover his loss from the surety on the bond of the subcontractor.—U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Probst, 97 S.W. 405, 30 Ky.L. 63.

(4) Under a building contract providing that the architect should certify any expense or damage incurred by the owner because of the contractor's failure to perform, where the contractor abandoned the work before completion, and immediately thereafter the architects were discharged and another architect was immediately employed and superintended the completion of the building, a certificate of damages signed by the new architect and by the only available member of the firm whose services had been dispensed with, the whereabouts of the other being unknown, was a sufficient compliance with the contract to entitle the owner to recover on the contractor's bond.—Tally v. Ganahl, 90 P. 1049, 151 Cal. 418.

Sureties may rely on strict performance of contract between principal and creditor.

§ 97. Necessity of Damage to Creditor or Obligee

Unless the condition is to save the obligee harmless, it is not essential that the breach by the principal injure the obligee.

Unless the condition is to save the obligee harmless, it is not essential that the breach by the principal injure the obligee.<sup>87</sup> Where the obligation secures the creditor or obligee against loss by reason of claims of others, it is not requisite to the surety's liability that the former have paid such claims<sup>88</sup> or been forced to pay them.<sup>89</sup>

§ 98. Acts Requisite to Fix Liability in General

Except where required by provisions of the contract, a demand or notice of default is not required to fix the surety's liability.

Except where required by provisions of the contract,<sup>90</sup> a demand or notice of default is not required to fix the surety's liability.<sup>91</sup> After notice of acceptance of the bond, it is not necessary to give the surety notice of the transaction between the obligee and the principal to secure which the bond was given.<sup>92</sup> Where the suretyship contract secures the accounting of deposits and payment thereof on legal demand, a mere letter by the depositor is not a sufficient legal demand so as to render the surety liable.<sup>93</sup>

§ 99. Commencement and Duration of Liability in General

In the absence of a statutory or contractual provision to the contrary, the liability of a surety accrues on the breach of the contract and continues until it is discharged.

B. CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT

§ 100. In General

Subject to the doctrine of strict construction, the general rules as to the construction of contracts apply to the contracts of a gratuitous surety, and, with some distinctions, to the contract by a compensated surety or surety company.

Contract construed

In contract securing one advancing money to another, provision that no demand or notice from obligee should be "prerequisite to liability of obligors hereunder" meant liability actually to make payment of debt avowed in opening paragraph of contract.—In re Brock, supra.

"Legal demand"

Where bank rule provided that savings accounts could be withdrawn only after a designated number of days' notice, with respect to liability of bank's surety which gave notice of termination of its liability on bonds, for nonpayment by bank on legal demand, default in payment on such demand occurred, not when notice was given, but when, later, demand was made.—Pennsylvania Slovak Roman and Greek Catholic Union v. American Surety Co. of New York, C.C.A. Pa., 71 F.2d 537, certiorari denied 55 S.Ct. 86, 293 U.S. 575, 79 L.Ed. 672.

98. Default in payment of rent

Bond to secure payment of rent providing that it should remain in force between certain dates if no default in payments of lease had occurred meant default in actual payments, not default on day payment was due.—Shaw v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co., 164 A. 916, 310 Pa. 213.

Two bonds

Where person agreeing to extinguish fire on vessel to be burned in connection with Independence Day celebration and to remove the hulk of the vessel from tidewater, executed bond to indemnify members of amusement division of chamber of commerce arranging the burning against loss by reason of execution of a bond having the same surety by the members to the commonwealth conditioned on the removal from tidewater of the hulk of the vessel, the two bonds must be read together in determining surety's liability on the first mentioned bond, the sole purpose of which was to shift the ultimate responsibility under the second-mentioned bond from the members to such person and, consequently, to such person's surety; but in determining liability on the second-mentioned bond the first-mentioned bond may not be considered.—Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co. v. ments to which the contract may refer,<sup>27</sup> and even another contract executed contemporaneously.<sup>28</sup> Where the language of the bond is that selected by the surety, it must be given the strongest interpretation which it will reasonably bear in favor of the obligee.<sup>29</sup> The interpretation given the building contract by the surety at the time the bond was given may be accepted by the court,<sup>30</sup> and, in the absence of fraud between the contractor and the owner, the surety may be bound by the construction placed on the contract by his principal.<sup>31</sup> The words used will be given their usual meaning.<sup>32</sup>

Similarly, in determining the liability of a surety on a subcontractor's contract, the bond and contract are to be construed reasonably<sup>33</sup> and as a whole.<sup>34</sup> Where the subcontract and bond are unambiguous, resort need not be had to the surrounding circumstances in order to ascertain the intent of the parties.<sup>35</sup>

§ 101. Strict Construction as to Gratuitous Surety

A gratuitous surety is a favorite of the law, and the contract must be strictly construed so as to impose on the surety only the burdens clearly within its terms, and it cannot be extended by implication, presumption, or construction.

A gratuitous surety is a favorite of the law,<sup>36</sup> and the contract must be strictly construed<sup>37</sup> so

Inconsistency

(1) Where a bond securing the performance of a building contract is executed subsequently thereto, as between the owner and the surety, a stipulation in the bond modifies, with the consent of the contractor, a stipulation in the building contract as far as inconsistent, and the stipulation in the bond controls as far as the surety is concerned.—Hax-Smith Furniture Co. v. Toll, 113 S.W. 650, 133 Mo.App. 404.

(2) Where the terms of a bond for the performance of a building contract conflict with the terms of the contract, the bond will control in determining the liability of the sureties.—Morgan v. Salmon, 135 P. 553, 18 N.M. 72, L.R.A.1915B, 1407.

Undertaking not wholly gratuitous

A contract of suretyship entered into by one not regularly engaged in such business is to be strictly construed in favor of the obligor, whether or not his undertaking is wholly gratuitous, especially where it is contended that the agreement is one to indemnify against liability for the acts of the obligee or its agents.—City of Philadelphia v. Philadelphia Gas Works Co., 49 Pa. Dist. & Co. 314.

where a clear intention that the sureties should come under a more enlarged obligation is shown,<sup>44</sup> and it has, by some authorities, been explained to be a rule, not of construction, but one of application of the contract after its meaning has been ascertained from an interpretation of the contract under the rules applicable to other contracts.<sup>45</sup>

§ 102. Strict Construction as to Compensated Surety

Generally, the rule that the surety is a favorite of the law and that his contract must be strictly construed does not apply to surety companies organized to make bonds or undertakings for a profit, or to a compensated surety.

While by some authorities no distinction with regard to its construction is made between the contract of a gratuitous surety and that of a compensated surety,<sup>46</sup> they are not ordinarily regarded as on the same footing.<sup>47</sup> At common law, and under statutes declaratory thereof, the rule that the surety is a favorite of the law and that his contract must be strictly construed does not apply to surety companies organized to make bonds or undertakings for a profit, or to a compensated surety.<sup>48</sup> This rule is without application where the con-

What is meant by the maxim is that, when the meaning of a contract of indemnity or guaranty has once been judicially determined under the rule of reasonable construction applicable to all written contracts, then the liability of the surety, under his contract, as thus interpreted and construed, is not to be extended beyond its strict meaning.—Covey v. #### Bond held a fidelity and performance bond

Bond of principal and surety company binding them to pay third person for loss sustained by third person because of any act of fraud, dishonesty, forgery, theft, larceny, or embezzlement on part of principal while in performance of a joint adventurer agreement with third person was both a fidelity and performance bond, at least to extent that it guaranteed that principal would undertake performance of agreement with honesty and fidelity.—Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. for assets coming into his hands, the principal can only perform the condition by payment into court or according to the order of the court.<sup>67</sup> Where the particular employment or office is not expressly stated but is clearly indicated by the terms of the contract, the surety's obligation is confined to such employment or office,<sup>68</sup> unless the surety consents that it be extended to cover another employment,<sup>69</sup> in which case the employment to which it extends limits the surety's obligation.<sup>70</sup> The surety is not liable for the acts of the principal in discharge of duties to one other than the obligee.<sup>71</sup> Recovery on the bond of one officer does not prevent recovery on the bond of another for the same default.<sup>72</sup> Where the trustees of a beneficial association give several bonds, the sureties on the several bond of one of them may be held for the personal default of their principal.<sup>73</sup> Instruction by a superior to the principal as to matters not within the scope of the latter's duties does not affect the surety's liability.<sup>74</sup> Where the principal carried on his office through employees, and a loss occurs as to the office, in the absence of proof that it was by the employees the surety of the principal is liable.<sup>75</sup> Sureties who have undertaken to be responsible for the principal within certain territory are not responsible for his acts elsewhere.<sup>76</sup>

§ 107. Period as to Which Liability Attaches

Unless sooner discharged, and except as it may be limited by the contract, the obligation of the surety continues for the same period as that of the principal.

Unless sooner discharged, or except as it may be limited by the contract, the obligation of the surety continues for the same period as that of the principal.<sup>77</sup> Where the facts indicate that the surety intended the obligation to be a continuing security for future credit to be extended to the principal, the surety's liability will run for such period, and the amount named in the contract limits the liability at the end of such time.<sup>78</sup>

fortiori the surety is not liable for antecedent acts or defaults of his principal where he has expressly stipulated against such liability.<sup>82</sup> In some cases sureties have been held liable for the defaults of the officer of a beneficial association occurring before the execution of the bond.<sup>83</sup>

§ 109. — Time of Employment or Office

Where an employee or officer is chosen for an uncertain period, the sureties on his bond generally will be liable for the duration of such period, and, if chosen for a definite period, his sureties will not be liable for defaults occurring after the period for which the bond was given.

Where an employee or officer is appointed, elected, or hired for an uncertain period, the sureties on his bond generally will be liable for the duration of such period.<sup>84</sup> The liability of the sureties of an employee as to anything that may occur thereafter is terminated by the removal<sup>85</sup> or resignation<sup>86</sup> of the employee, although his employment by the person secured may be continued thereafter;<sup>87</sup> but their liability for matters which occurred prior to such removal or resignation is not affected thereby.<sup>88</sup>

If the principal is appointed, elected, or employed annually or for a definite period, his sureties will not be liable for defaults occurring after the expiration of the year or period for which the bond was given,<sup>89</sup> although he is reappointed or reelected,<sup>90</sup> and although the bond is conditioned for the performance of duties by the principal during his continuance in office.<sup>91</sup> So, if the principal has been employed to accomplish certain work, his sureties are not liable after that work has been accomplished.<sup>92</sup> Where the bond fails to state the term, it may be coextensive with the term of the original appointment.<sup>93</sup> The fact that the office of the principal is an annual one need not appear in the bond.<sup>94</sup> Sureties will be liable for subsequent terms if the language of their contract indicates such an intention,<sup>95</sup> although it is requisite, even in such cases, that the service of the principal be continuous,<sup>96</sup> unless there is a contract provision otherwise.<sup>97</sup> An office does not become an annual one merely because the officers appointing the principal are chosen annually.<sup>98</sup>

(1) Contract whereby sureties assumed buyer's prior indebtedness as shown by seller's books contemplated that liability be shown solely by seller's books, and books themselves must furnish information required with reasonable certainty without aid of parol evidence or loose-leaf memoranda kept otherwise than in, and as part of, books.—W. (3) Seller was not entitled to recover against sureties contracting to assume buyer's prior indebtedness as shown by seller's books, where books carried alleged account in form of entries consisting only of dates and figures and letter "M," especially in absence of invoice numbers and of testimony that letter "M" was well understood as meaning merchandise.—W. annually or at fixed periods, the surety is not liable after the expiration of such period and a reasonable time thereafter for the choice and qualification of a successor.<sup>99</sup> If a successor is not chosen, and the principal continues in office without any re-appointment or reelection, the sureties cannot be held for any default occurring after his term has expired.<sup>1</sup> The contract may, however, contain a provision that the liability shall continue until a successor is named and qualified.<sup>2</sup>

§ 110. — Successive Contracts or Periods

In the absence of the surety's assent, a surety on one contract is not liable on a subsequent contract; nor is a surety on the subsequent contract liable on the prior contract.

In the absence of the surety's assent,<sup>3</sup> as for example, by provision in his contract therefor,<sup>4</sup> a surety on one contract is not liable on a subsequent contract;<sup>5</sup> nor is a surety on the subsequent contract liable on the prior contract.<sup>6</sup> So, a surety for the performance of a contract is not, in the absence of a specific agreement, a surety for the performance of a renewal of the contract.<sup>7</sup> Where there are successive bonds, with different sets of sureties on each, it is the time of an actual defalcation and not the technical breach which determines which set is liable.<sup>8</sup> Although there is authority to the contrary,<sup>9</sup> if the principal uses money collected during one term to make good the defaults of a prior term, the sureties on the last bond given are liable.<sup>10</sup> The termination of an employee's contract by a second appointment will release his surety from liability under the later appointment.<sup>11</sup> The sureties on the bond of the officer of a beneficial association are not relieved from liability for a defalcation because the association accepted the officer's resignation, where a new officer was immediately elected and installed, and the demand was made on the former one for the funds.<sup>12</sup>

§ 111. — Term of Lease

A surety of a lessee for a fixed term is not liable after its expiration, although the lessee holds over, and the lessee has an option for a renewal, unless the language of the contract indicates the contrary.

A surety of a lessee for a fixed term is not liable after its expiration, although the lessee holds over,<sup>13</sup> and the lessee has an option for a renewal,<sup>14</sup> unless the language of the contract indicates the contrary.<sup>15</sup> The rescission of a lease by the lessor will terminate the liability of the surety for rent to accrue thereafter.<sup>16</sup> So, where the tenant's surrender of the premises is accepted by the landlord, the tenant's surety is not liable for rent to accrue,<sup>17</sup> although he remains liable for the rent already due.<sup>18</sup> A reletting of the premises by the lessor by the direction of the surety does not operate as a surrender.<sup>19</sup> The removal from the premises of a tenant by summary proceedings likewise terminates the liability of the tenant's surety as to the rent thereafter accruing,<sup>20</sup> but the surety is not released by the issuance of the warrant in such proceedings where the surety assented to a stay to permit the tenant to pay the rent, which payment

C. AMOUNT RECOVERABLE

§ 112. In General

As a general rule, the liability of a surety in the absence of contractual limitation is measured by the loss or damage directly resulting from the default of the principal with respect to the act to secure the performance of which the suretyship contract is entered into.

As a general rule, the liability of the surety in the absence of contractual limitation<sup>25</sup> or provision for liquidated damages,<sup>26</sup> as distinguished from a penalty,<sup>27</sup> is measured by the loss or damage directly resulting from the default of the principal with respect to the act to secure the performance of which the suretyship contract is entered into.<sup>28</sup> In the case of a continuing security for future credit to be extended to the principal, the amount named by him in the obligation indicates the balance of the principal's account for which he may be held.<sup>29</sup> If the surety's liability is not continuing, he cannot be held for any credit extended to the principal after the amount designated by him has been reached,<sup>30</sup> although future payments made by the principal have reduced the amount due.<sup>31</sup> Sureties for an amount owing by the principal are liable for what is actually due<sup>32</sup> and not for the amount recited in the instrument as being due,<sup>33</sup> or for amounts subsequently due.<sup>34</sup>

If sureties bind themselves severally for certain amounts, each is liable up to that amount.<sup>35</sup>

The surety is entitled to have sums received by the obligee properly going in reduction of the damages suffered by the obligee applied in mitigation thereof.<sup>36</sup>

Building or construction contract. Where the principal fails to discharge his obligations under a building or construction contract, the obligee can recover the actual damages sustained up to the penalty named in the bond,<sup>37</sup> and he is entitled to be placed in the position in which he would

Damages held speculative

Surety on bond of contractor for part of work on building, which was to be completed at a certain time, was held not liable for damages for the contractor's abandonment of the work, since such damages were too speculative.—People v. Metropolitan Surety Co., 154 N.Y.S. 373, 168 App. Div. 615, appeal dismissed 111 N.E. 1094, 217 N.Y. 612.

Damages to mortgagees

(1) True measure of mortgagee's damages for breach of bond for completion of building is extent to which its security was impaired, and actual cost of completion may make damages more certain, or may be used as proof of damages, but is not controlling unless it represents the difference in value between building on date fixed for completion and building as it then should have been.—Prudence Co. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, C.C.A.N.J., 77 F.2d 834, modified on other grounds 56 S.Ct. 387, 297 U.S. 198, 80 L.Ed. 581, motion denied 56 S.Ct. 679, amended 56 S.Ct. 935, 298 U.S. 642, 80 L.Ed. 1374.

tures in good faith in completing the contract has been held to be entitled to recover on the bond without showing that the expenditures were reasonably, necessarily, prudently, or wisely made.<sup>44</sup> After the obligee has completed the contract, the surety has been held not to be entitled to have the balance of the contract price credited on the penalty named in the bond.<sup>45</sup>

Where the contract so provides, the owner must have the architect certify his expenses in completing the contract before he can hold the surety liable therefor,<sup>46</sup> and an architect's certificate given after the commencement of an action on the bond has been held to be too late.<sup>47</sup> A rough estimate by the architect as to the cost of completion, when not accepted or relied on by the surety, is not conclusive on the obligee as to the extent of recovery.<sup>48</sup> The fact that the owner has made payments on estimates furnished does not estop him as against the contractor's surety from recovering expenses in overhauling and rebuilding part of the work improperly done,<sup>49</sup> particularly where the contract provides that the advances required to be made by the owner shall not be deemed an acceptance or waiver of any defective work, and does not require the owner to inspect the quality and character of the work, or that the architect shall do so before the owner shall make the advancements.<sup>50</sup>

Expenditures less than unpaid portion

Creditor completing contract was not entitled to recover from surety for alleged expenditures in excess of unpaid portion of contract price, where all figures introduced showed total to be less than such unpaid portion, and plaintiffs' only exhibit containing additional items was not introduced in evidence and could not have been considered by jury in reaching verdict.—Standard Accident Ins. #### Liquidated damages

(1) In an action on a building contractor's bond, plaintiff was entitled to the liquidated damages provided for in the contract, until completion of the work by him, if he completes the work within a reasonable time, but he could not enhance his damages by unreasonable delay.—School Dist. No. 3 of Ford County v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Baltimore, Md., 152 P. 668, 96 Kan. 499.

(2) A provision in a contractor's bond that, if the obligee should complete or relet the contract, any forfeiture provided therein against the principal should not be operative against the surety, excluded the liability of the surety for liquidated damages under the contract, where the obligee completed or relet the contract.—Village of Canton v. which, although it may not be from the same time that the principal is liable for interest,<sup>63</sup> is generally, in the absence of statutory provision or stipulation in the contract to the contrary, such time.<sup>64</sup> Unless a provision of the contract provides otherwise, when demand or notice is necessary interest may be computed only from the time of the demand or notice.<sup>65</sup> The filing of a claim<sup>66</sup> or institution of a suit<sup>67</sup> may be a sufficient demand. In some jurisdictions interest is computed from the date of the breach.<sup>68</sup> The rate may be stipulated in the contract,<sup>69</sup> in which case the sureties may not be held for interest at a higher rate.<sup>70</sup>

§ 114. Costs

Sureties are not liable for costs and expenses incurred by the creditor or obligee in an endeavor to enforce the liability of the principal, unless a suit is necessary to disclose the principal's liability.

Sureties are not liable for costs and expenses incurred by the creditor or obligee in an endeavor to enforce the liability of the principal<sup>71</sup> unless a suit is necessary to disclose the principal's liability.<sup>72</sup> The rule that a surety on a bond is not liable beyond the penalty named therein, as discussed supra § 93, does not prevent the recovery of costs where allowed, even though the addition of such amount makes the total amount exceed the penalty;<sup>73</sup> but it has been said that a surety's liability does not ordinarily extend beyond the penalty of the bond unless he has in some way resisted or obstructed the recovery of the claim against him.<sup>74</sup>

§ 115. Attorney's Fees

Sureties are not liable for the attorney's fees of the creditor or obligee unless there is an express provision in the contract to that effect, or the sureties have agreed to be liable for all expenses, or statutes so provide.

Interest in excess of face of bond distinguished

For interest which does not bring total liability beyond penalty of the bond, surety is liable for principal's debt, so that interest runs as against the principal, usually from the date when principal violates the obligation secured, but, for other interest in excess of face of the bond, surety can be held liable only for its own default.—Burns v. Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co., 146 P.2d 29, 62 Cal.App.2d 972.

Defendant precluded from applying value of pledged bonds

The fact that surety on bonds given to secure road district's deposits with bank, and providing that no suit could be brought against surety by reason of any default of principal until after sixty days from default, was precluded from applying value of government bonds pledged to indemnify surety on its liability on depositary bonds through attitude of receiver of depositary bank toward pledge, did not suspend liability of surety for interest from date on which bank closed.—*Lloyds America v. ## VI. TERMINATION AND RELEASE OR DISCHARGE OF SURETY'S LIABILITY

§ 116. In General

Generally speaking, the liability of a surety ends with the extinguishment of the obligation of the principal; but there are exceptions to this rule, as where a married woman, minor, or other person under a personal disability is discharged by reason of such disability.

It is a well-established rule, both at common law and under statutes, that the liability of a surety ends with the extinguishment of the obligation of the principal.<sup>83</sup> Accordingly, as discussed infra §§ 223-226, a surety is generally discharged when his principal is released from liability, although there are exceptions to this rule, notably cases in which the principal is released through causes which originate with the law and not in the voluntary acts of the creditor, as discussed infra §§ 232-244. Another exception is to be found in the rule that a surety for a married woman, minor, or other person incapable of contracting remains bound notwithstanding the principal may be discharged because of his incapacity,<sup>84</sup> unless the principal without capacity to contract disaffirms and restores to the creditor or obligee everything received by him under the contract.<sup>85</sup> The surety is not released because other parties with whom he is acting do not comply with their agreement with him through no fault of the obligee or creditor.<sup>86</sup> Generally speaking, a compensated surety can be relieved from liability only where the circumstances clearly justify relief.<sup>87</sup>

Judgment in favor of principal. A surety can set up, as a defense, that a judgment has been rendered in favor of the principal in an action for the same alleged default.<sup>88</sup> The rule has been held to apply even though the surety was not a party to the action in which judgment was rendered,<sup>89</sup> although there is also authority to the contrary.<sup>90</sup> Even though judgment has been obtained against the sureties, if judgment afterward is rendered in favor of the principal the sureties are released.<sup>91</sup> If the principal succeeds only in reducing the amount of the claim against him, the sureties are released to the same extent.<sup>92</sup> The surety is not released by a judgment of dismissal for want of prosecution in favor of the principal where due to the failure of the surety to see that the action was prosecuted in accordance with his agreement,<sup>93</sup> nor is the surety released where, on appeal, the judgment for the principal is reversed.<sup>94</sup>

Merger of right and liability. Whenever a note or bond on which the principal is primarily liable comes into the hands of the principal, with a right to enforce it, a surety thereon is discharged.<sup>95</sup> Similarly, if a mortgagee purchases the mortgaged land,<sup>96</sup> or if a purchaser of land takes an assignment of a judgment which is a lien on the land,<sup>97</sup> or a landlord takes an assignment of a lease on which the surety is secondarily liable for the rent,<sup>98</sup> a surety for the indebtedness is discharged by the merger of the right and liability in one person; but the liability of a surety for the accrued rent of personal property under a contract of letting, reserving to the owner the option of requiring the return of the property, is not released by a sale of the property and termination of the letting.<sup>99</sup> A surety on a judgment is not discharged by an assignment of the judgment to the wife of the principal debtor in the absence of any showing that the judgment has been paid by the principal or that the consideration for the assignment was money of the principal.<sup>1</sup>

§ 117. Provisions of Contract of Suretyship

The termination of a surety's liability ordinarily is governed by the provisions of the contract of suretyship.

In conformity with the principle, discussed supra § 91, that the liability of a surety is measured by his contract, it may be said in general terms that, in the absence of earlier termination by release, mutual agreement, or operation of law ordinarily the termination of a surety's liability is governed by provisions of the contract, if any.<sup>5</sup> Thus, under statutory bonds so providing, sureties may be discharged when counter security is not given to them on their request and compliance with specified conditions.<sup>6</sup> So too, where the obligation of a surety on a building contractor's bond is, under the terms of the bond, to terminate a specified time after the time for completion of the building, his obligation cannot be enlarged by an unauthorized extension of the contractor's time for completion of the building.<sup>7</sup>

Where wife was injured by display of fireworks and husband incurred medical expenses and other kindred damages as result of wife's injuries, action by husband and wife against surety company on bond given by fireworks display licensee conditioned for payment of all damages caused by reason of the display was not barred under theory of res judicata because of judgment exon-erating the licensee from liability in prior action based on licensee's negligence, and therefore exclusion of proceedings in action against licensee was not error.—McBride v. Maryland Casualty Co., 23 A.2d 596, 128 N.J.Law 64, 138 A.L.R. 932.

Provisions in the contract of suretyship for rescission, revocation, or termination generally of such contract are considered infra § 129.

§ 118. Acts or Conduct of Principal in General

As a general rule, no act of the principal which does not extinguish his own obligation is sufficient of itself to discharge his surety.

As a general rule the principal cannot by any act of his, except one which will extinguish the debt or obligation, discharge the surety.<sup>8</sup> Some act of the creditor or obligee is required in order to discharge him.<sup>9</sup> The fact that the principal uses a note signed by the surety to remove encumbrances on exempt property of the principal, thus decreasing the property available to creditors, does not discharge a surety in the absence of any misrepresentation.<sup>10</sup> In the absence of an express provision to the contrary, a surety is not discharged by reason of the fact that the principal has conducted his business through subordinates or agents.<sup>11</sup> Failure of the principal to pay the premium to the surety is not a ground for discharging the surety as against the creditor or obligee.<sup>12</sup>

Breach of his obligations by the principal as affecting the surety's liability is discussed supra § 95; and questions as to the termination or discharge of the surety's liability by acts or conduct of the creditor or obligee generally are discussed infra §§ 148-160.

§ 119. Amendments, Stipulations, and Other Matters in Judicial Proceedings Affecting Bonds Therein

Generally speaking, a surety on a bond given in a

Judicial proceeding in accordance with statutory requirements is not released by amendments to the pleadings unless their effect is to impose on the surety a liability greater than that originally assumed.

A bond which is authorized and required to be given in a judicial proceeding is subject to the provisions of law then existing with respect to the conduct of the action, as determining the scope and effect of the obligation thereby assumed.<sup>13</sup> Generally a surety is not released by amendments to the pleadings<sup>14</sup> unless their effect is to impose on him a liability greater than he had originally assumed, as by letting in a new cause of action<sup>15</sup> or causing a variation of the risk the surety assumed,<sup>16</sup> or the amendments are of such a character that the court does not have power to allow them except on the stipulations of the parties.<sup>17</sup> So amendments which change the form of action,<sup>18</sup> increase the damages claimed,<sup>19</sup> or substitute a real for a nominal party<sup>20</sup> do not release the surety. So amendment of the writ in the action in which the bond is given so as to increase the ad damnum does not release the surety, where such amendment does not let in a new demand or a new cause of action.<sup>21</sup>

Sureties will be released by a change which brings new parties into the proceedings,<sup>22</sup> and in several jurisdictions, although there is also authority to the contrary,<sup>23</sup> by the dismissal of the action as to one or more of the parties defendant.<sup>24</sup> If a bill is filed by a creditor in behalf of himself and others who might come in,<sup>25</sup> or the obligation of the sureties contemplates the payment of any judgment which may be rendered on the trial and judicial determination of the cause of action,<sup>26</sup> an intention is shown to allow such changes and the sureties are not discharged, and in the latter case, if the bond was given in consideration of a con-terms of building and construction contract as discharging surety see infra § 126.

Immaterial variations in the proceedings, not increasing the liability of the sureties, will not release them.<sup>29</sup> An agreement by several parties holding identical claims to try one of them and make the verdict rendered therein conclusive as to all will not discharge the sureties;<sup>30</sup> nor will stipulations of the parties, such as that no appeal be taken, the judgment of the trial court to be accepted as final,<sup>31</sup> or that a bill to enjoin the collection of a judgment be dismissed,<sup>32</sup> or that the right to a deficiency judgment in an action to foreclose a mortgage be waived.<sup>33</sup> The modification of a judgment at the instance of the person secured so as to increase the amount due will discharge a surety for the payment thereof,<sup>34</sup> but a reduction of the amount will not.<sup>35</sup> A change with respect to the return day will release the sureties on an undertaking given during judicial proceedings.<sup>36</sup>

§ 120. Discharge by Order of Court

Where a bond is given in judicial proceedings, the court may not, without the consent of the parties, discharge the bond or release the surety except in accordance with statutory provisions conferring such power.

A court does not have power to release sureties on the bond of a person acting in a fiduciary capacity except it be done in accordance with the provisions of a statute conferring such power.<sup>37</sup> Unless so released by the court, a bond once approved remains operative as a security until its conditions are performed, or its penalty exhausted, or until it is barred by the statute of limitations.<sup>38</sup> In the case of statutory bonds in judicial proceedings, the court cannot, unless a statute provides otherwise, or unless with the consent of the parties interested, discharge the bond<sup>39</sup> or release the surety.<sup>40</sup> Where a statutory provision authorizes the release of a surety, such provision must be strictly complied with, in order that the release may be effective.<sup>41</sup> So, where the statute provides that the surety may apply for a release, or contemplates that the initial step for obtaining a release must be taken by the surety, the proceeding asking for his discharge generally must be on his petition.<sup>42</sup> It is within the power of the court to discharge the surety from liability on the bond where the action has abated.<sup>43</sup>

§ 121. Diversion of Contract or Use of Proceeds for Unauthorized Purpose

Diversion of an instrument or the proceeds thereof from the purpose to which the parties have limited it by their agreement will, in the absence of consent on his part, discharge the surety from liability to one having notice of the limitation and diversion.

If one becomes surety on an instrument, and the parties have agreed that such instrument or the proceeds thereof shall be used only for a specified purpose, the use of the instrument or the proceeds for a different purpose without the consent of the surety will discharge him from liability to anyone having notice or knowledge of such limitation and of the diversion of the instrument or proceeds.<sup>44</sup> An assignment by a contractor, of the proceeds of a public improvement contract, for value received, without the knowledge or consent of a compensated surety, does not constitute a material alteration of the contract sufficient, under the rules discussed infra § 124, to work a discharge of the surety from its obligation under the bond.<sup>45</sup>

§ 122. — Negotiable Instruments

Diversion of a note or its proceeds without the surety's consent ordinarily will discharge the surety from liability to anyone with notice of the diversion.

In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, if one becomes a surety on a note or other negotiable instrument for a specified purpose, according to the agreement of the parties, he is not liable, if it is used for a different purpose without his consent, to anyone having notice or knowledge of such purpose and the diversion of the instrument;<sup>46</sup> but one who takes the instrument without notice or knowledge of the diversion from the use for which the surety executed it may hold the surety,<sup>47</sup> and a surety cannot complain that a note was used for a purpose different from the one he supposed it would be,<sup>48</sup> or that the principal diverted the proceeds to a use other than that agreed on, where such agreement was in no way communicated to the party seeking to enforce the obligation.<sup>49</sup>

In some cases the rule is that, where a note is signed by a surety for the purpose of obtaining a discount, it is immaterial by whom the money is advanced, provided the purpose has been accomplished, and although the note may be sold to another than the payee,<sup>50</sup> or such is the result if the party who takes such note has no knowledge of any limitation on the purpose of the instrument imposed by the surety, the fact that it is made to a particular payee being considered insufficient to give such notice,<sup>51</sup> or where there is a general intention to become surety to raise money without regard to the person to whom the note should be passed.<sup>52</sup> However, if a note is made payable to a bank, or a cashier of a bank, so that it shows on its face that it was made for the purpose of being discounted at a particular bank, it has no validity as to the sureties unless it be so discounted.<sup>53</sup>

In other cases, however, it has been held that if a note is not delivered to the payee, but is sold to a third person without the consent of the sureties thereon, it cannot be enforced against them.<sup>54</sup> Discharge of an accommodation party as surety on a negotiable instrument is discussed generally in Bills and Notes § 752; and diversion of accommodation paper as affecting the liability of the accommodation party is considered in Bills and Notes § 753.

Consent of surety. A surety may consent to a diversion of the instrument or proceeds,<sup>55</sup> or waive a defense that he has been discharged thereby,<sup>56</sup> as by making a new promise to pay the debt.<sup>57</sup>

§ 123. Impossibility of Performance; Destruction of Subject Matter

Where the principal has unqualifiedly promised to perform an act, impossibility of performance will not release the surety, although a surety is discharged where the law prevents performance of his contract. Generally, the effect on the liability of the surety in the case of destruction of the subject matter of the contract is the same as the effect thereof on the liability of the principal.

Impossibility of performance by the principal of an act which he has unqualifiedly promised to do will not release the surety;<sup>58</sup> but a surety is discharged where the law prevents performance of his contract.<sup>59</sup> Generally, whether the liability of a surety ceases with the destruction of the subject matter of the contract depends on the liability of the principal. Thus the surety remains liable if the principal does,<sup>60</sup> and is relieved if the principal is relieved.<sup>61</sup> So, since at common law the lessee is not released from liability for rent by reason of the destruction of the premises, as discussed in Landlord and Tenant § 486, the destruction of a building which is the subject of a lease is not a

- b. Sufficiency of alteration
- c. Necessity of prejudice to surety
- d. Materiality of alteration
- e. Effect of consent of surety

a. In General

Where the principal contract or the contract of suretyship is materially altered, changed, or departed from without the surety's knowledge or consent, ordinarily the surety is discharged from liability.

As discussed supra § 91, a surety has the right to stand on the letter of his contract, and if, without his knowledge or consent, any material alteration or change is made in the contract entered into by him, or in the contract or obligation, the performance of which is secured, he is discharged;<sup>65</sup> and it is to be noted that an alteration, within the foregoing rule, may be accomplished either by material changes in the language of the instrument or by material departures from its terms in its execution and enforcement.<sup>66</sup> It is immaterial that the alteration was made without fraudulent intent;<sup>67</sup> nor is it necessary that the alteration affect the validity of the contract since, despite the fact that the surety is discharged, the principal,<sup>68</sup> and cosureties, who have consented to the alteration,<sup>69</sup> will remain bound. ### Reasons for rule

(1) Alteration of the principal's contractual obligation releases the surety, for the principal is no longer bound to perform the obligation guaranteed and the surety cannot be held responsible for failure to perform any other obligation.—Becker v. Faber, 19 N.E.2d 997, 280 N.Y. 146, 121 A.L.R. 1010, reargument denied Becker v. Intemann, 21 N.E.2d 216, 280 N.Y. 730—Greenwich Sav. Bank v. Eckford Realty Corporation, 48 N.Y.S.2d 664, 263 App.Div. 195.

(2) Similar reasons.—Reese v. U. S., Cal., 9 Wall. 13, 19 L.Ed. 541—50 C.J. p 116 note 37 [a].

make the instrument conform to the intention of all the parties will not release the surety, although they are made without his knowledge and consent.<sup>70</sup>

It is an alteration, and not the attempted performance<sup>71</sup> or enforcement,<sup>72</sup> of the terms of a contract which, unless the surety consents, discharges him. An action taken by the creditor pursuant to the terms of his contract cannot be regarded as an alteration thereof discharging the surety.<sup>73</sup> A surety will not be discharged because the obligee, after the principal failed fully to perform, completed the work in a manner different from that called for in the original contract.<sup>74</sup> Clearly a surety cannot be relieved from liability on the ground of alteration where in fact no alteration has occurred.<sup>75</sup> It has been held that the rule that a change or alteration in the obligation extinguishes the surety's obligation and discharges him generally applies only to contracts between private parties,<sup>76</sup> and does not apply so as to discharge one who is not a surety but is a comaker of the principal instrument.<sup>77</sup>

Independent contracts or stipulations. A surety is not discharged by an independent, collateral, or auxiliary agreement between the principal and the creditor or obligee which does not vary the terms of the first contract,<sup>78</sup> as where the principal executes a mortgage to secure the note on which the surety is bound.<sup>79</sup> If the performance of two or more contracts is secured by the contract of the surety, a change as to one will not affect his liability as to the other;<sup>80</sup> and where the contract of a surety can be enforced by two or more parties although an alteration made by one of them may discharge the liability of the surety as to that one it will not discharge him as to the others.<sup>81</sup> The breach by the principal of a provision in the contract for which no penalty is provided as against the surety is not an alteration of the terms of the contract discharging the surety.<sup>82</sup>

Changes before contract of suretyship or after accrual of liability. If the surety's obligation is assumed with reference to a change already made in the principal's contract, such alteration will not discharge the surety.<sup>83</sup> A modification of the contract does not relieve the surety of liability for those debts of his principal which matured before any change was made in the contract.<sup>84</sup>

Application of rule to negotiable instruments. Under the rule that the purport of a commercial instrument on which a memorandum has been written is to be collected from its "eight corners," as discussed in Bills and Notes § 42 b, the unauthorized alteration of an indorsement of payment so

Filling in amount

Where the contract of suretyship contains a dollar sign followed by a blank space for the amount of indebtedness covered, and the obligee fills the correct amount into such space after its execution, such filling in does not amount to a material alteration of the contract.—McConnon & Co. v. 84. Pa.—Land Title Bank & Trust Co. v. Freas, 5 A.2d 165, 334 Pa. 26.

Waiver of interest

Creditor may waive further collection of interest without disturbing status of its already matured claim against surety for payment of principal sum, as long as creditor preserves, for surety's benefit, its claim against debtor for entire principal sum.—Land Title Bank & Trust Co. v. Freas, supra.

alters the amount of the note as to discharge a surety not consenting.<sup>85</sup> A material alteration of a note given for an indebtedness which is not extinguished by, and exists independently of, the writing will, since the surety's liability exists solely by virtue of the writing, release him from all liability.<sup>86</sup> Immaterial changes or alterations in the terms of a note, however, will not discharge the surety.<sup>87</sup> Under the view that, as far as the holder of a bill or note is concerned, the liability of a surety is primary rather than secondary, it follows that, as far as the surety is concerned, the question as to when he is released by variation of the contract is governed by the provisions of the Negotiable Instruments Law applicable to the discharge of persons primarily liable;<sup>88</sup> and it has been held that such statute changes the former rule applicable to such a case.<sup>89</sup>

Application of rule to leases. In conformity with the general rule applicable to suretyship contracts, a surety for a lessee cannot be held for rent after a material change in the terms of the lease<sup>90</sup> or in the terms of the contract of suretyship,<sup>91</sup> and will be discharged by a material alteration of the lease contract or obligation without the surety's consent;<sup>92</sup> but, where an act or departure from the terms of the contract does not amount to a material alteration of the lease or the suretyship contract, the surety will not be released from liability.<sup>93</sup> The surety is not discharged by a modification or alteration of the principal contract or obligation made with his knowledge and consent<sup>94</sup> or where the tenant deposits money as security and the landlord has no knowledge of the third person's relationship as surety.<sup>95</sup> If, after a suretyship contract has been placed on the same paper on which it secures, the tenant erases his signature, signs again, and the covenant is attested, the surety is not discharged on the ground of a material alteration of the contract.<sup>96</sup>

b. Sufficiency of Alteration

An alteration, in order to effect the discharge of the surety, must be binding on the parties, based on a sufficient consideration, and such as would constitute a valid defense by the principal to an action on the original contract.

In order that a surety on a contract may be discharged from liability thereon by an agreement altering its terms between the principal and the obligee, such agreement, except in a case where the agreement is by way of alteration of the original instrument,<sup>97</sup> must be binding on the parties,<sup>98</sup> based on a sufficient consideration,<sup>99</sup> and such as would be a valid defense by the principal debtor to an action on the original contract.<sup>1</sup> In general, it is necessary that both the principal and creditor or obligee consent to the agreement altering the contract or undertaking of the principal in order for it to discharge the surety.<sup>2</sup> So, alterations made without the knowledge or consent of the creditor or obligee do not affect the liability of a surety<sup>3</sup> unless he subsequently ratifies them.<sup>4</sup>

An alteration by an authorized agent of the creditor or of which the agent has knowledge will discharge the surety,<sup>5</sup> although it is otherwise if the agent making the alteration does not have any authority to make it.<sup>6</sup> In the absence of fraud a contract by a corporation will not be held a modification of a contract between the principal and a partnership, the members of which own practically all the stock of the corporation, so as to discharge the sureties.<sup>7</sup>

Necessity of writing. Ordinarily it is not necessary that the agreement altering the contract be in writing,<sup>8</sup> but a surety will not be discharged by a parol agreement between the obligee and the principal changing the terms of a contract under seal<sup>9</sup> or of a written contract which is of such a character that under the statute of frauds it must be in writing.<sup>10</sup>

contract by the principal<sup>11</sup> or an acceptance of part performance<sup>12</sup> has been held not such a modification as will discharge a surety from liability; but under some circumstances a contrary rule may be applied.<sup>13</sup>

c. Necessity of Prejudice to Surety

Generally a surety will be discharged by any material alteration of the terms of the contract regardless of whether he is prejudiced thereby, unless he is a compensated surety.

As a general rule it is not necessary that the alteration or change add to the burden of the surety or be prejudicial or injurious to him in order that he be discharged;<sup>14</sup> the fact that it was not prejudicial to him,<sup>15</sup> or did not increase his liability<sup>16</sup> or actually injure him,<sup>17</sup> or even that it was for his benefit,<sup>18</sup> will not vary the rule, it being held that he will be discharged regardless of whether such alteration or change was beneficial or prejudicial to him.<sup>19</sup> In some jurisdictions the rule is stated to be that the surety is discharged by any alteration, and the court will not inquire into the question of whether there was in fact any prejudice, and, if so, the extent thereof,<sup>20</sup> provided there

Acceptance of rent a few days after it is due ordinarily does not constitute an alteration or modification of the agreement between the landlord and tenant so as to discharge the surety.—Fox v. Como, 50 Pa.Dist. & Co. 386.

Provision as to effect of waiver

The surety for a tenant under a written agreement of lease may not complain of a variation of the contract by acceptance of rent after it falls due, where the lease itself contains provisions recognizing that rent may be accepted after the due date and stipulating that such acceptance shall not excuse subsequent delay or be construed as a waiver of any right of the landlord.—*Fox v. #### "Rights" prejudiced

Surety whose "rights" have been materially prejudiced need not show is a possibility of prejudice to the surety.<sup>21</sup> On the other hand, the rule in some jurisdictions is that a surety will not be discharged by an alteration or change in the contract<sup>22</sup> or a departure therefrom<sup>23</sup> unless he has been prejudiced thereby. In at least one jurisdiction, it has been held that a departure from the contract, as distinguished from an actual change in the terms thereof, will not release a surety thereon unless his position has been changed to his prejudice.<sup>24</sup>

Compensated and corporate surety. Although in a few jurisdictions the rule that a surety is discharged by an alteration regardless of whether he is prejudiced thereby is held to apply even in the case of a paid or corporate surety,<sup>25</sup> it is generally held that in order for a compensated or corporate surety to be discharged by an alteration of, or departure from, the contract or obligation it must have been prejudiced thereby.<sup>26</sup> This rule has been held applicable even though the bond provides that it is to be strictly construed as a contract of suretyship.<sup>27</sup>

Although there is some authority to the contrary, it is generally held that, in order to discharge a surety, an alteration must be material, especially in the case of a compensated surety.

As a general rule an alteration or change in the contract or obligation must be material in order to discharge a surety thereon.<sup>28</sup> If the change or departure is immaterial,<sup>29</sup> such as one which does that he has been injured to be discharged from liability.—Passman v. Budnizky, 1 N.E.2d 707, 284 Ill.App. 533.

(2) It has also been said that the surety will be discharged by a material alteration regardless of whether the alteration could work any injury to the surety.—Weingarten v. Kramer, 247 N.Y.S. 657, 139 Misc. 74.

(3) However, the rule of the text has in some instances been clearly followed.—Ullmann Realty Co. v. Hollander, 123 N.Y.S. 772, 774, 66 Misc. 348—50 C.J. p 120 note 77 [a] (2, 3).

not change the legal effect of the instrument<sup>30</sup> or place the surety in a different position,<sup>31</sup> he will not be discharged. However, in some jurisdictions, it has been held that, as a general rule, any variation or change in the contract or obligation, whether material or not, is sufficient,<sup>32</sup> this being sometimes referred to as the strict rule;<sup>33</sup> in others it has been held that deviations from the contract with respect to acts of omission and commission in matters of performance must be material in order to discharge a surety,<sup>34</sup> but that any variation in the terms of the contract itself, as by adding additional terms and stipulations, will discharge the surety.<sup>35</sup>

Apart from the question of whether the alteration must be material, if the change alters the legal identity of the instrument<sup>36</sup> or substantially increases the chances of loss to the surety<sup>37</sup> it is material and will discharge the sureties. Permission by the obligee to the principal to perform in any way he chooses, provided the contract obligation is lived up to, is not a modification of the contract so as to release the surety;<sup>38</sup> and in general a waiver of some provision which is solely for the benefit of the principal or of the creditor is not such alteration as will discharge the surety.<sup>39</sup>

Compensated or corporate surety. An alteration or change in the contract or obligation must be material in order for a compensated or corporate surety to be discharged from liability thereby,<sup>40</sup> some jurisdictions holding this an exception to the

Substitution of new obligation for old

By "alteration" in principal's obligation, such as will release the surety, principal is discharged from performance of the obligation in its original form, and in effect, a new obligation is substituted for the old.—Becker v. Faber, 19 N.E.2d 997, 280 N.Y. 146, 121 A.L.R. 1010, reargument denied Becker v. Intemann, 21 N.E.2d 216, 280 N.Y. 730—In re Metz' Estate, 18 N.Y.S.2d 883, 173 Misc.

general rule of the forum that any variation is sufficient.<sup>41</sup> This rule has been held applicable even though the bond provides that it is to be construed strictly as a contract of suretyship.<sup>42</sup> Where the alteration is material, it is sufficient to discharge even a paid surety,<sup>43</sup> provided there is also prejudice to the surety, where prejudice is required under the rules discussed supra subdivision c of this section.

e. Effect of Consent of Surety

A surety is not discharged by an alteration to which he consents; and such consent may be given after the alteration as well as in advance.

The consent of the surety to any variation or change in the contract or obligation of the principal otherwise sufficient to discharge him is essential to the continuance of his liability.<sup>44</sup> If he consents to an alteration of the contract or obligation he is not discharged thereby.<sup>45</sup> This consent need not be express, but may be implied.<sup>46</sup> It may be given in advance,<sup>47</sup> as, for example, at the time the contract of suretyship is entered into,<sup>48</sup> or it may with equal effect be given at a time subsequent to the alteration,<sup>49</sup> subsequent ratification being equivalent to original authority to make the alteration.<sup>50</sup> Where the contract contemplates or expressly authorizes alterations to be made, the surety will not be discharged by alterations within the limits intended, which were made without his express consent;<sup>51</sup> but, when the alterations are such that instead of a modification a new contract superseding the old one is in effect made, a surety who has not assented to the change will be discharged.<sup>52</sup> A new consideration is not essential to support the consent of the surety to the alteration, regardless of whether such consent is expressed before or after the alteration.<sup>53</sup> A notation of an alteration on the instrument by the creditor will not, even though made without his knowledge, discharge a surety who has agreed to the change in terms.<sup>54</sup>

f. Waiver or Estoppel

A surety may by his contract waive his right, or be estopped to assert, his discharge by reason of an alteration of the contract or obligation.

A surety may waive his right to be discharged because of an alteration or change in the contract.<sup>55</sup>

Silence

(1) Mere silence or passive consent after knowledge of change of contract under which surety signed does not constitute acquiescence or consent to change by surety.—Pacific Nat. Agr. Credit Corporation v. Hagerman, 51 P.2d 857, 39 N.M. 549, 101 A.L.R. 1301—50 C.J. p 114 note 89 [a].

(2) On the other hand, it has been held that a surety will be estopped to show that he did not assent to alteration of the contract if he remains silent when the facts and circumstances make it his duty to speak and the obligee is misled thereby to his injury, as where, on learning of the alteration of the bond to secure the payment of public funds before any funds were deposited with the depository, he nevertheless remains silent and permits the deposit of funds to be made.—Renville County v. Gray, 63 N.W. 635, 61 Minn. 242.

Change not provided for in contract
Where a bond contains the words "sealed with our seals," the clause raises no implication of an intent to have a seal added after execution, and is mere surplusage.—Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. McCoy, 41 Hun, N.Y., 142.

55. Ala.—Culwell v. Edmondson, 129 So. 276, 221 Ala. 424.

Knowledge by the surety of the alteration is necessary to a waiver.<sup>56</sup> The rule that assent to an alteration made in the contract or obligation amounts to a waiver of the right to rely thereon as a defense, discussed in Alteration of Instruments § 75, applies to a surety who gives his subsequent assent to the alteration of an instrument.<sup>57</sup> So, a surety's right to claim discharge by reason of an alteration is waived by an acknowledgment of liability or a new promise to pay the debt after the alteration,<sup>58</sup> or by bringing suit on the instrument as altered,<sup>59</sup> or by a request for an extension of time for payment.<sup>60</sup> A surety is estopped to show that he did not assent to an alteration of the contract if, after changes have been made in the contract, he takes it over and completes it, receiving payment thereon,<sup>61</sup> or if he signs a statement that the contract is binding<sup>62</sup> or has been satisfactorily performed in accordance with its terms.<sup>63</sup>

g. Extent of Discharge

Although a contrary rule is sometimes followed in the case of a compensated surety, generally speaking a material alteration operates as a complete discharge of the surety and not merely as a pro tanto discharge.

Generally speaking a material variance, change, or alteration of the contract operates as a complete discharge of the surety and not merely as a pro

tanto discharge;<sup>64</sup> but, according to some authorities, a compensated surety is discharged only to the extent that it is prejudiced or injured thereby,<sup>65</sup> at least in certain cases.<sup>66</sup> Having been discharged by the change in the contract, the surety cannot be charged with liability for failing to use diligence to see that the original contract was carried out.<sup>67</sup>

Revivor of liability. The liability of the surety will not be revived by a restoration of the instrument to its original form<sup>68</sup> or by the fact that the principal attempts to perform the original agreement.<sup>69</sup>

§ 125. — Contracts or Obligations of Officers, Agents, or Employees

A surety for an officer, agent, or employee is discharged by a material alteration respecting the duties, place of employment, or compensation of the principal unless he consents to such alteration.

As a general rule a surety for an officer, agent, or employee is discharged by a material change or enlargement of the duties of his principal<sup>70</sup> unless he has consented to such changes.<sup>71</sup> It requires a material change in the duties and responsibilities of the principal to discharge the sureties on his bond.<sup>72</sup> Thus a mere change in the designation of the office of the principal, without a material change in his duties,<sup>73</sup> or the imposition of additional duties on

Signing instrument in blank

Where a surety signs a note in blank, with marginal figures indicating the amount for which it is to be filled out, and the principal alters the figures and fills out and negotiates the note for a larger amount, the alteration does not of itself discharge the surety.—Schryner v. Hawkes, 22 Ohio St. 308.

Suing for receiver

the principal, not materially changing or incompatible with his former ones,<sup>74</sup> will not discharge the surety, the default not being connected with the added duties; but it is otherwise if the added duties have enlarged the responsibility of the principal enabling him to commit the default.<sup>75</sup> Thus a surety for an agent will be discharged by a change in the rules governing his conduct, allowing him to give credit instead of requiring payment in cash,<sup>76</sup> or by the creditor's release of a requirement that statements or reports be made by the principal at specified intervals,<sup>77</sup> or by a change in their requirements.<sup>78</sup>

Sureties are not discharged because the duties of the principal are increased by the natural growth of the business in which he is engaged;<sup>79</sup> nor does an increase in the capital of the obligee discharge the sureties of a cashier.<sup>80</sup> While the resignation of a treasurer necessarily makes him a custodian of money in an individual rather than in an official capacity, his surety will not be discharged.<sup>81</sup> Whether a change with respect to making remittances will discharge a surety depends on whether the making of remittances was a term in the contract for which the surety expressly or impliedly agreed to become liable; if not a term in the contract, a surety will not be discharged, in the absence of injury occasioned thereby,<sup>82</sup> but where it is an integral part of the contract a material change with respect thereto discharges the surety.<sup>83</sup>

A contention that the duties of an agent were increased by his appointment as general state agent, whereas the bond was executed as the bond of a special county agent only, is without merit, where the contract appointing the agent as general agent was made before the date of the bond, and the default complained of was not with respect to his acts as general agent.<sup>84</sup> The sureties on a several continuing bond given by one of the trustees of a lodge whose by-laws provide that the bond of a trustee shall be joint or several are not liable after the lodge has changed its by-laws so as to require the trustees to give a joint and several bond.<sup>85</sup>

If the principal already holds another office at the time the surety enters into his contract, the surety cannot urge the other duties as a defense;<sup>86</sup> and, if the sureties have undertaken to become liable for all of the duties to which the principal may be assigned, a change therein will not affect their liability.<sup>87</sup> An employee's temporary or casual performance of other duties at the request of his employer will not release his sureties from liability.<sup>88</sup> With respect to the question whether they have been materially changed, if the nature of the duties of the office are not recited in the contract, they are those which plainly and commonly belong to the class of employment by which the principal is designated.<sup>89</sup>

Place of employment or operation. As a general rule a surety is discharged by a material change in the place of employment of his principal<sup>90</sup> unless he has consented thereto.<sup>91</sup> A change in the size of a salesman's territory ordinarily will release his surety from liability.<sup>92</sup> However, he will not be released from liability for defaults which occurred prior to the time such change was made.<sup>93</sup>

Compensation. A surety is not discharged by an alteration respecting the amount of compensation

§ 126. — Building and Construction Contracts

- a. In general
- b. Changes in plans or specifications
- c. Changes respecting time

a. In General

Immaterial changes in a building or construction contract do not affect the liability of the contractor's surety, but material changes will discharge the surety, unless such changes are authorized by the contract or bond, or unless the surety consents to such changes or is barred from asserting his discharge by reason of waiver or estoppel.

In accordance with general rules discussed supra § 124, immaterial changes which do not alter the essential features of a building and construction contract, the general character of the work contemplated by it, or the general character of the materials necessary for its execution do not affect the surety's liabilities on the bond.<sup>95</sup> However, the terms of the obligation cannot be materially changed without the surety's consent, even with a view to avoiding ultimate liability;<sup>96</sup> and, as a general rule, any material alteration or change in a building contract, without the surety's consent, discharges him from liability on the bond given to secure the performance of such contract;<sup>97</sup> and this rule is not affected by the fact that the contractor assures the owner that the liability of the surety will not be affected by the change.<sup>98</sup> Of course, the surety cannot be discharged on the ground of alteration or modification of the contract, where there is no alteration<sup>99</sup> or where the work done is in conformity with the terms of the contract;<sup>1</sup> nor can he claim to be discharged by reason of alterations which were made prior to his signing the bond with knowledge thereof.<sup>2</sup> A surety who unjustifiably repudi-

Change from initial draft

Fact that the terms of the initial draft of a building contract were departed from did not affect the contractor's bond, although the change was made after the bond was signed and before delivery, where the bond applied only to the executed building contract and was delivered by one to whom it had been intrusted for that purpose, with full knowledge of the change.—Cortright Metal Roofing Co. v. Merten, 145 N.W. 261, 95 Neb. 164, followed in Farley & Loetscher Mfg. Co. v. Merten, 145 N.W. 263, 95 Neb. 171, Nebraska Material Co. v. Merten, 145 N.W. 264, 95 Neb. 172, and Johnson v. ates his obligations cannot complain of a subsequent alteration of the contract between the owner and the contractor so as to facilitate the completion of the construction.<sup>3</sup>

Alteration of a building and construction contract without the knowledge or consent of the owner, creditor, or obligee does not affect the liability of the surety;<sup>4</sup> neither is the surety discharged because the builder performs additional work not demanded by the owner.<sup>5</sup> Under a statute declaring that a contract in writing may be altered only by a written instrument or executed oral agreement, a surety on a written construction contract is not discharged by verbal changes in the contract, unless such changes are executed.<sup>6</sup> A failure to perform a contract on time does not release the surety from liability for a failure to pay claims for labor and material, as to the payment of which no time limit is provided in the bond.<sup>7</sup>

or change in, or departure from, the terms of the contract, although a material one, is authorized by the contract,<sup>8</sup> as where it is made by the owner or the architect under a contract which permits him, at any time during the progress of the building operations, to make alterations, changes, or additions without invalidating the contract,<sup>9</sup> or where the bond itself contains a similar provision,<sup>10</sup> it does not discharge the surety. Such a provision, however, applies only in cases, and to the extent, contemplated by the contract<sup>11</sup> or bond;<sup>12</sup> the changes, although material, must be fairly within the scope of the original undertaking, reasonably within the contemplation of the parties, and not so extensive as to constitute a departure from the original contract,<sup>13</sup> and, if they do not meet these requirements but are instead radical and revolutionary, the surety will be released.<sup>14</sup> Where the contract specifies the manner in which the changes shall be made, some authorities hold that failure to comply with such provisions discharges the sure-

Subcontractor's surety

(1) The surety of a subcontractor is not discharged from liability because the principal contractor and subcontractor make such departures from the contract between them as are authorized by the contract under which the principal contractor agreed to do the work.—Pacific Bridge Co. v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., 73 P. 772, 33 Wash. 47.

(2) The suspension of work on an original building contract by the architect, under authority given by the contract, does not discharge the surety of a subcontractor for a portion of the work whose contract expressly made the provisions of the original contract a part of the subcontract.—Lester v. Dwyer Plumbing & Heating Co., 133 P. 1180, 66 Or. 474.

Extra work

Where the contract provides for the ordering of extra work, the requiring of such extras does not violate or change the contract so as to release the surety.

Changes constituting abandonment of original contract

Under building contractor's bond providing that alterations which might be made in the terms of the contract or the work to be done under it should not release surety, no change in the contract or in the work done under it, not equivalent to abandonment of the original contract and substitution of a new one, would discharge surety, and it was held immaterial that changes were brought about by cancellation of original drawings and substitution of new ones.—Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co. v. John R. Thompson Co., supra.

ty,<sup>15</sup> but others hold that noncompliance with such requirements, at least to the extent that they are merely procedural, does not discharge the surety.<sup>16</sup> A provision authorizing changes, alterations, and additions in the construction of a building does not authorize changes as to other contract provisions.<sup>17</sup>

Collateral agreement. The surety is not released by an independent collateral agreement between the owner and the principal<sup>18</sup> or by a change in a collateral contract between the contractor and a subcontractor which in no way prejudices the surety.<sup>19</sup>

Changes necessitated by contractor's conduct. Where the change or departure from the contract is, as between the contractor and the owner, due entirely to the acts or omissions of the contractor, the surety cannot successfully claim discharge on the ground of alteration of the contract.<sup>20</sup> Thus, the sureties are not discharged by a change in the work made necessary by the negligence or default of the builder,<sup>21</sup> as where changes in the work are made because the architect does not consider it properly done.<sup>22</sup>

Prejudice or injury to surety. Generally speaking, it is the deviation from the terms of the contract that operates to release the surety, and not the injury or damage done by such departure, and the breach of the contract ipso facto nullifies it as to the surety,<sup>23</sup> regardless of whether or not the changes are shown to injure him,<sup>24</sup> and even though the changes may be of benefit to the surety.<sup>25</sup> However, it has been held that the rule discharging the surety from liability, even though the changes do not increase his risk or cause him injury, is not applicable where the surety is engaged in the business of suretyship for compensation; such a surety is not discharged by a change in the contract unless it is prejudiced or injured thereby.<sup>26</sup>

Discharge as to third party beneficiaries. Even though there has been a material alteration of the contract between the contractor and the owner, the

Verbal order

Under the rule stated in the text, where the contract provides that the changes must be evidenced by a written agreement, the making of such changes without a written agreement discharges the surety.—Chapman v. Eneberg, 68 S.W. 974, 95 Mo.App. 127.

9 C.J. p 860 note 26.

A secret understanding between owners and a building contractor that, when he completed the work, they might want him to take a second mortgage for what might be due, not being a contract, did not release his surety, especially where he was delinquent when the favor would have been required and the entire price was paid in cash.—Martin v. Empire State Surety Co., 101 P. 876, 53 Wash. 290.

Agreement between principal parties to contract for additional work, not included in original contract, is independent contract not constituting material alteration of original, so as to release surety on contractor's bond.—U. surety is not discharged as to materialmen for whose benefit the bond is required to be given<sup>27</sup> and who furnished material after such alteration without actual or constructive notice thereof.<sup>28</sup>

Waiver or estoppel. Provisions in the contract for the benefit of the obligee alone may be waived without affecting the liability of the surety;<sup>29</sup> and it has been held that the principal can waive a provision intended solely for his own benefit which requires notices from the owner or to the surety to be in writing.<sup>30</sup> Accordingly, it has been held that the fact that changes are not ordered in writing, as stipulated by the contract, does not release the surety, since such provision is for the benefit of the contractor as well as the owner and may be waived by the contractor.<sup>31</sup> However, where a waiver by the contractor amounts to abandonment of the contract, it is not a modification so as to discharge the surety.<sup>32</sup>

Where an alteration of a building contract is consented to, or ratified by, the sureties, they cannot avail themselves of such alteration as a defense;<sup>33</sup> but a surety will not be held estopped where he had no notice of the change and did not acquiesce therein.<sup>34</sup> Where a surety takes over the work which has been abandoned by the contractor after some changes in the contract have been made, and without objection completes the contract as changed, demanding and receiving payment as for the original contract, he is estopped to claim that the changes were outside the original contract or made without his consent.<sup>35</sup>

(1) In General

Material changes in the plans or specifications made without the surety's consent will discharge the surety; but the surety will not be discharged on the ground of alteration of plans or specifications where no changes, or only immaterial changes, have occurred.

Where a building contract provides that the owners may employ a supervising architect and they do not exercise the right, the surety on the bond of the contractor cannot claim exemption by pleading change of the contract.—Meyer v. Bichow, 63 So. 487, 133 La. 975.

A "substantial variance" has been defined as any variance other than mere inconsequential departure from the plans and specifications.—Prudence Co. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, D.C.N.Y., 7 F.Supp. 392, 397, reversed on other grounds, C.C.A., 77 F.2d 834, modified on other grounds 56 S.Ct. 387, 297 U.S. 198, 80 L.Ed. 581, motion denied 56 S.Ct. 679, amended 56 S.Ct. 935, 298 U.S. 642, 80 L.Ed. 1374.

37. Ky.—Hammond v. Hurst, 277 S.W. 308, 211 Ky. 167.
9 C.J. p 860 note 32.

Addition of another story to the height of a building involves a material change so as to discharge sureties.—Barrett-Hicks Co. v. Glas, 111 P. 760, 14 Cal.App. 289—Barrett-substantial alteration with respect to the materials used,<sup>38</sup> will discharge the sureties if such changes are made without their consent.<sup>39</sup> On the other hand, immaterial changes in the plans or specifications will not discharge the surety, even though they are not authorized by the contract and are made without the surety's consent,<sup>40</sup> or although made otherwise than in the manner provided in the contract for the making of alterations,<sup>41</sup> particularly where such changes are made at the contractor's request<sup>42</sup> or where the surety's agent is notified of the change and does not object.<sup>43</sup>

Accordingly, where changes merely require the contractor to perform some additional work without materially changing the original plans, the surety is not thereby relieved from liability under the contract;<sup>44</sup> and whether such a change involves a material change in the contract or is merely an addition thereto is usually a question for the jury.<sup>45</sup> An immaterial change in the location of the building will not discharge the sureties;<sup>46</sup> but a material change of location will discharge them.<sup>47</sup> The fact that the owner, in completing the work after abandonment by the contractor, made some changes from the plan and specifications, due allowance being made for the difference in price, does not discharge the sureties.<sup>48</sup>

Where changes are agreed to on behalf of the obligee by one without authority to do so,<sup>49</sup> or are made at the request of a third party,<sup>50</sup> the surety is not discharged; nor is he discharged where a change or departure from the plans and specifications is, as between the contractor and the obligee, due entirely to the acts or omissions of the former.<sup>51</sup> The surety is not discharged on the ground of alteration of plans or specifications where there has been no change in the plans or specifications to which the contract refers,<sup>52</sup> although the initial plans or specifications have been changed.<sup>53</sup>

(2) Provisions Authorizing Changes

A surety is not discharged by changes in the plans or specifications which are authorized by the contract or bond.

The surety is not discharged by changes or alterations in the plans or specifications where such changes or alterations are authorized by the contract or bond,<sup>54</sup> or where the contract or bond ex-

Where an architect in charge of a building, in violation of the terms of a contract, makes changes in the contract without the owner's consent, he goes beyond his agency and in no way binds the owner of the building and does not discharge the surety.—Fullerton Lumber Co. v. Gates, 89 Mo.App. 201.

Surety's implied acceptance of provisions for alteration

Where building contract is referred to in bond, and it provides that contractor shall faithfully keep his covenants and agreements and turn over building free and clear of liens accruing by reason of work described in contract or any modification thereof, surety must be held to have agreed that he will be equally bound where changes authorized by building contract are made.—Rob-

Test

In determining whether changes in the plans or construction affect the liability under a contractor's bond which referred to and made a part of its plans and specifications reserving to the owners the right to alter or modify the plans and specifications, the test is whether the changes "alter or modify the plans and specifications" of the building contracted to be erected, or do they amount to a contract for a different building.—Southern Surety Co. v. Nalle & Co., Tex.Civ.App., 231 S.W. 402.

Limitation to changes not substantially increasing price

(1) Where there is no provision in the contract for increasing the contract price to meet changes in the plans and specifications, a stipulation in the bond that any alteration in the plans between the owner and the contractor would not release the surety is applicable only to those changes which do not substantially increase the cost of the building beyond the amount that the owner by contract had agreed to pay.—Altman v. Sproles, 255 S.W. 573, 1092, 161 Ark. 128.

(2) A provision in a construction contract that there should be no changes or modifications in the plans unless agreed on and fixed in writing, signed by the owner and the contractor, could be waived as between the owner and the contractor, and such waiver as to a minor change would bind sureties under a provision in the bond that changes involving decreased expenditure or increased expenditure of less than one thousand dollars, or not involving any change in cost, could be made without the consent of the sureties.—Blackwood v. McCallum, 203 P. 758, 187 Cal. 655.

(3) In an action on a paid surety's building contract bond, the contract authorized aggregate changes not exceeding ten per cent of the penal sum of the bond without consent of the surety, "aggregate" meaning net increase in cost because of changes.—National Surety Co. v. Haley, 159 P. 292, 53 Okl. 263.

A slight departure from the plans of the work in a builder's contract, without the knowledge of the sureties on a bond, where alterations are authorized by the contract secured by the bond, will not release the surety from liability on the bond. Kan.—Risse v. Hopkins, 40 P. 904, 55 Kan. 518.

Okl.—American Surety Co. v. Scott & Co., 90 P. 7, 18 Okl. 264.

Changes not inconsistent with penalty for delay

the chimneys of a building, but making no change in the character or exterior dimensions of the building, although material alterations, do not discharge the contractor's surety where the contract permits the owner without restriction to make changes in the drawings and plans;<sup>57</sup> and any doubt as to whether changes made were such as were permitted by the contract must be resolved against the surety.<sup>58</sup> Generally speaking, provisions in the contract or specifications with respect to alterations are limited by conditions of the bond restricting the right of alteration.<sup>59</sup> Violation of a clause in the bond, to the effect that if the owner should make alteration in the plans increasing the cost by more than a specified amount he must notify the surety, does not release the surety.<sup>60</sup> It is a common practice for the parties to a building and construction contract, when stipulating for alterations, to provide that such changes shall be made only on the written agreement of the parties, or that the parties shall agree on the cost thereof before they shall be made; and, when a material alteration is made without the observance of such formalities, the question arises whether the surety is discharged.<sup>61</sup> The authorities are not agreed on the subject.<sup>62</sup> In some jurisdictions it is held that a failure to observe such formalities will discharge the surety,<sup>63</sup> except where the bond or contract expressly provides that no alterations, or no alterations not exceeding certain limits, should release the surety of liability.<sup>64</sup> A doctrine to the contrary is adhered to in other jurisdictions, where it is held that such formalities are solely for the benefit of the owners and contractors, and may be waived by them without releasing the surety.<sup>65</sup> It has also been held that a change not made in accordance with the provisions of the contract governing the mode of making alterations is not an alteration within the meaning of a provision in the bond that the surety shall be discharged by an alteration made without his consent.<sup>66</sup>

e. Changes Respecting Time

A contractor's surety will be discharged by a material change with respect to the time within which the work is to be completed.

Where a material change is made in the contract with respect to the time within which the work is to be completed, the surety is discharged.<sup>67</sup> The principal's failure to commence work on the date specified ordinarily does not constitute a substantial breach of his bond to the contractor.<sup>68</sup> Where, at the time a building contract is signed and the bond given, the contract is silent as to the time within which the building is to be completed, the insertion thereafter, without the surety's consent, of a provision limiting the time to a specified period dising the building, the making of material changes in the plans which are not shown to have required a longer time for construction does not discharge the surety.—Doyle v. Faust, 153 N.W. 725, 187 Mich. 108.

In Iowa

(1) The rule stated in the text has been followed.—Bartlett & Kling v. Illinois Surety Co., 119 N.W. 729, 142 Iowa 538.

(2) However, it has also been held that, where the owner materially changes the plans and has extra work done without a special agreement minuted on the original contract as therein required, the surety for the contractor is discharged.—Stillman v. Wickham, 76 N.W. 1008, 106 Iowa 597.

charges the surety.<sup>69</sup> However, where the bond provides that alterations of the contract by written agreement shall not release the surety, the surety is not released by an extension of time in writing.<sup>70</sup> Where the surety is jointly bound as principal for the performance of the contract of construction, he is not discharged by the fact that the obligee permits completion of the construction after the time specified in the contract.<sup>71</sup>

§ 127. — Particular Changes or Alterations

The question whether or not particular changes, such as changes affecting the compensation of the principal, amount of the obligation, interest, and other matters, will discharge the surety depends largely on whether the particular change is material or immaterial.

Applying the general rule as to the effect of material alterations, discussed supra § 124, to particular changes, alterations, or modifications other than those involved in contracts or obligations of officers, agents, or employees, discussed supra § 125, or in building and construction contracts, discussed supra § 126, it has been held that a surety is discharged by material alterations as to the place<sup>72</sup> or time of performance,<sup>73</sup> or date of the contract;<sup>74</sup> by alterations consisting of inserting or striking out

On the other hand, various changes have been held not to constitute material alterations so as to discharge the surety,<sup>88</sup> as, for example, the addition of words more accurately describing matters mentioned in the contract,<sup>89</sup> an alteration in the affidavit of justification to the bond,<sup>90</sup> a change in the recital of the consideration for the obligation, where such change does not alter the legal effect of the instrument,<sup>91</sup> or the elimination from the principal's bond of void provisions.<sup>92</sup> The indorsement of an agreement extending the time of payment made on the back of a promissory note has

88. Change as to place

The insertion in a note, as the place of execution, of the place where the contract was actually made and in accordance with the laws of which the note is to be governed does not vary the terms of the contract as far as the surety is concerned, since it does not import to it any effect that it did not before possess.—Houston v. Potts, 64 N.C. 33.

Change of date

Where the time for performance or payment is fixed, and it does not depend on the lapse of a particular period from the date of the instrument, the change of a day in the date is immaterial.—Frather v. Zulauf, 38 Ind. 155—2 C.J. p 1204 note 72.

Change of name

(1) Where a mistake in the designation of the payee in a promissory note is corrected by changing in the designation the Christian name, such correction is an immaterial alteration so as not to discharge a non-consenting surety.—Derby v. Thrall, 44 Vt. 413, 8 Am.R. 389.

(2) Where a note payable to a partnership was indorsed by a surety and afterward altered by the maker and payee, without the knowledge of the surety, by changing the name of the payee so as to make the note payable to the same partnership under a different name, the surety was not discharged as the change was immaterial.—*Arnold v. been held not to be an alteration of the note, but merely the making of a memorandum of the agreement to extend the time.<sup>93</sup>

Compensation of principal. A surety is not, as a general rule, discharged by a change in the compensation of his principal,<sup>94</sup> by a change in the rate of commissions allowed, which does not change the duties of the principal or vary the risk of the surety,<sup>95</sup> by a change from commissions to a salary,<sup>96</sup> by a change in the amount allowed him for expenses,<sup>97</sup> or because a guaranty of the payment of his commissions is withdrawn.<sup>98</sup> On the other hand, it has been held that a change from a salary to commissions will discharge a surety,<sup>99</sup> as will a reduction of the commissions to be received by the principal.<sup>1</sup> Where the compensation was an express term in the contract of the surety, so that a change therein amounts to a new agreement between the employer and the principal, a change in the amount of compensation<sup>2</sup> or a change from a salary to a commission<sup>3</sup> is held to be such a material alteration as will discharge the surety.

Amount of obligation. Where the amount of the principal's obligation is changed a surety is discharged,<sup>4</sup> but a mere reduction of the amount demanded of the debtor, where such reduction does not alter the contractual obligation which is the subject of the suretyship, will not discharge a surety,<sup>5</sup> and it has been held that a reduction of the amount of a note by a bank to make it conform to the amount actually lent will not discharge the sureties thereon.<sup>6</sup> The creditor's unauthorized filling in of a blank in a surety bond with the amount of the existing indebtedness owing by the principal is a material alteration which discharges the surety.<sup>7</sup> A claim by the obligee in his pleading for a larger amount than is due him is not a change in the terms of the contract which will discharge the sureties from liability.<sup>8</sup> Where the bond of a principal is provided by different sureties executing separate bonds, each of which states the total amount of the principal's bond and designates the limits of the individual surety's liability, the fact that the aggregate sum for which all the sureties are bound exceeds the amount required is not a material alteration of the bond after its execution.<sup>9</sup>

Interest. A material alteration as to interest discharges the surety.<sup>10</sup> So, adding a clause to a note, calling for the payment of interest,<sup>11</sup> or changing the time when interest is to begin,<sup>12</sup> the time payable,<sup>13</sup> or the rate,<sup>14</sup> discharges the surety. On the other hand, an immaterial change as to interest will

Reduction of rate

(1) An agreement between the creditor and principal permanently reducing the rate of interest discharges the surety.

Minn.—Fillmore County v. Greenleaf, 83 N.W. 157, 80 Minn. 242.

N.Y.—Greenwich Sav. Bank v. Eckford Realty Corporation, 48 N.Y.S.2d 664, 268 App.Div. 195—Greenwich Sav. Bank v. Cabin Holding Corporation, 26 N.Y.S.2d 791, 176 Misc. 89.

(2) However, where the creditor accepts a lower rate of interest as an act of leniency, the surety is not discharged.—Becker v. Faber, 19 N.E.2d 997, 280 N.Y. 146, 121 A.L.R. 1010, reargument denied Becker v. Intermann, 21 N.E.2d 216, 280 N.Y. 730.

not discharge the surety.<sup>15</sup> Thus, a collateral agreement for a changed rate,<sup>16</sup> or that the interest is to cease after a certain time,<sup>17</sup> has been held not to affect the liability of the surety, even though such independent agreement is indorsed on the note itself.<sup>18</sup> Also, an agreement which is not binding will not discharge a surety from liability,<sup>19</sup> so that sureties on a note will not be discharged by an increase in the rate of interest which was made on the fraudulent representations of the maker that the sureties had agreed to such an increase in consideration of an extension of time, unless the payee acts under the agreement after learning that the sureties refused to assent thereto.<sup>20</sup> It has been held that, where without fraudulent intent a clause calling for payment of interest was inserted in a note and subsequently erased, the sureties will not be discharged.<sup>21</sup> Sureties on a debt secured by a second mortgage will not be discharged by an increase in the rate of interest of the first mortgage.<sup>22</sup>

Extension of credit. Where the surety has stipulated that his liability shall not exceed a certain amount, an extension of credit to the principal for a larger amount is not an alteration which discharges the surety;<sup>23</sup> nor will a surety on a contract containing a continuing sale provision be released from liability because the creditor permitted the principal to become gradually more indebted without notice to the surety.<sup>24</sup> If the agreement between the creditor and the principal provided that the latter should not receive credit beyond that amount, an extension of credit beyond the amount specified discharges the surety;<sup>25</sup> and the increase of a credit opened by a bank in a current account in favor of a person, without the consent of the sure-

Acceleration of maturity. As a general rule, sureties on notes due successively will be discharged by an agreement entered into between the payee and the principal, without their consent, that on non-payment at maturity of any of the notes all shall become due.<sup>27</sup> It has been held, however, that, where the maturity of notes due successively has been accelerated by a contract to which the surety who signed the notes is not a party, he is not discharged from liability inasmuch as the contract in no way affected his liability and he was only bound to pay on the dates specified in the notes.<sup>28</sup>

Arbitration. A surety for the performance of an award will be discharged by a substitution of arbitrators<sup>29</sup> or by the inclusion of matters in the award not embraced in the submission.<sup>30</sup> The submission of the question of damages in condemnation proceedings to arbitrators instead of to a jury will not discharge a surety of plaintiff,<sup>31</sup> provided the award is filed in court and judgment entered thereon;<sup>32</sup> but if the submission is treated as a common-law arbitration, to have effect irrespective of any action of the court, the surety will be discharged.<sup>33</sup>

Particular changes with respect to leases. A reduction in the rent to be paid under a lease is not alone sufficient to discharge the lessee's surety;<sup>34</sup> but reduction of the rent and shortening of the term of the lease have been held sufficient to discharge the surety,<sup>35</sup> as have changes which involve enlarging the premises and increasing the rent and burdens of the lessee,<sup>36</sup> diminishing or surrendering part of the premises,<sup>37</sup> or inserting provisions for surrender of the premises on the occurrence of certain contingencies.<sup>38</sup> The surrender of a lease by a sublessee will not release his surety from liability for the performance of the covenants of the sublease;<sup>39</sup> nor will the action of the sublessee in thereafter paying the rent to the parties who acquired the sublessor's interest in the premises.<sup>40</sup> Subletting will not of itself discharge the surety;<sup>41</sup> and the fact that the lessor occupied part of the premises for a portion of the term with the consent of the tenant, no change having been made in the contract, does not release the surety.<sup>42</sup>

§ 128. Rescission or Revocation of Principal Contract

Rescission or revocation of the principal contract ordinarily will release the surety from any further liability, but not from liability for obligations which have already become fixed thereunder.

The rescission or revocation of the principal contract by the parties thereto, will, as a general rule, discharge the surety from further liability,<sup>43</sup> but it will not release him from liability for obligations which have already become fixed thereunder.<sup>44</sup> A surety is not released by a notice of the obligee to the principal that he is going to cancel the principal contract where the latter, at his urgent request, is given further indulgence.<sup>45</sup> An intervention by the other party to the contract in aid of its execution,<sup>46</sup> or to protect his rights until its execution,<sup>47</sup> is not a rescission of the contract discharging the surety. A refusal of the other party to the contract to continue to be bound by it after the principal's breach,<sup>48</sup> or a forfeiture of the contract based on the principal's breach of its terms,<sup>49</sup> does not operate to discharge the surety, especially where the contract provides for forfeiture on terms which assume the continuance of the principal's accrued indebtedness thereunder;<sup>50</sup> but the obligor cannot, after declaring a forfeiture, recover from the surety any damages predicated on affirmance rather than disaffirmance of the contract.<sup>51</sup> Even though the contract provides for termination at any time at the option of the obligee, if the obligee arbitrarily and illegally terminates the contract without any reason other than a desire to collect immediately from the surety, the surety is discharged.<sup>52</sup> Whether notice by the obligee to the principal constitutes rescission or an election to stand on the contract is a matter of intent.<sup>53</sup>

§ 129. Rescission or Revocation of Contract of Suretyship

Under certain circumstances, a surety may terminate the contract of suretyship, and thereby release himself from further liability.

A surety bound for an indefinite and contingent liability and not for a sum fixed and certain to become due may revoke and end his future liability where the guaranteed contract has no definite time to run; or where it has such definite time, but the principal has so violated it and is so in default that the creditor may safely and lawfully terminate it on account of the breach.<sup>54</sup> Where the surety-

An agreement by the lessor with the lessee to rent the premises for the latter and at his risk and give him the benefit of all the rent received, qualified by the stipulation that the agreement should not be construed as impairing or altering the lease, etc., makes no change in the terms of the lease or the obligations of the tenants.—Morgan v.

§ 130. Spoliation of Principal Contract

Accidental mutilation or destruction of the original contract, or alteration thereof by a stranger, ordinarily will not discharge the surety.

A physical destruction of the original contract by a stranger,<sup>57</sup> or an accidental mutilation or destruction,<sup>58</sup> or a destruction or mutilation by the guardian of the creditor,<sup>59</sup> or an alteration by a stranger,<sup>60</sup> will not discharge the sureties. However, where the alteration so transforms the obligations as to increase the liability of the obligors, the obligee cannot recover according to the tenor of the instrument as so transformed, since the character of the instrument has been changed and is not the instrument executed by the obligor or surety.<sup>61</sup>

§ 131. Surety's Notice to Terminate

In a proper case, a surety may terminate the contract of suretyship by sufficient notice to such effect and thereby release himself from further liability; and such right sometimes exists by reason of statutory or contractual provisions.

Apart from contractual provisions to such effect,

if the surety's liability is to arise or is to be increased by future acts of the obligee or creditor, and no time has been prescribed in the contract, the surety can terminate his liability as to the future by notifying the creditor or obligee that he withdraws,<sup>62</sup> but he remains liable for any rights the creditor or obligee previously may have acquired,<sup>63</sup> and, if the creditor or obligee suffers further losses after the receipt of the notice in spite of his diligent efforts to protect himself, the sureties are not entitled to have their liability thus limited to the defaults before the notice was received.<sup>64</sup> On the other hand, if the consideration for the surety's contract has been executed fully, as in the case of a bond for the performance of services,<sup>65</sup> or in the case of an official bond, as discussed generally in Officers § 165, such as the bond of a tax collector,<sup>66</sup> the surety cannot terminate his liability by notice unless the creditor assents thereto.<sup>67</sup> Where a lease is from year to year or from month to month, a surety thereon may, by notice, terminate his liability as to rent accruing by reason of a hold-over clause,<sup>68</sup> but he cannot, by notice, terminate his contract during its continuance.<sup>69</sup>

Statutory provisions. Where the right to terminate his contract is given to a surety by statute, it is essential, in order that the surety be released, that he comply strictly with the law.<sup>70</sup> A right given to sureties by statute to terminate their contracts must be deemed to be intended to include surety companies, where the statute does not ex-

Alteration of "duplicates"

With respect to release of surety because of alteration of so-called "duplicate notes" delivered to creditor by principal when original notes signed by surety were accidentally destroyed, such new notes were not duplicates in the sense of instruments having the same legal effect and validity as originals, but were in fact intended merely to be used as copies or evidence, as nearly as possible, of the notes which had been destroyed.—Nickle v. Lewis, 272 N. W. 525.

pressly except them, and, at the time of its enactment, surety companies were expressly authorized to act as sureties.<sup>71</sup> The surety company, by accepting a contract of indemnity from the principal which expressly provides that such acceptance shall not limit or abridge any right or remedy which the surety may otherwise have, does not waive the statutory right to terminate the contract;<sup>72</sup> nor does the mere fact that the company has received compensation for a period beyond the date of a motion for discharge from further liability prevent the company from obtaining the statutory relief.<sup>73</sup>

Contractual provisions. A surety may expressly reserve in his contract the right to terminate it by notice,<sup>74</sup> and the same is true as to the right of the creditor or obligee to annul the suretyship contract by notice.<sup>75</sup> Where the contract gives the creditor or obligee the right to annul it by notice, and notice is given, the surety remains liable for all breaches prior to such notice,<sup>76</sup> but, where the bond also contains a provision for completing the transaction at the expense of the principal and surety, the surety is liable thereunder even after the notice.<sup>77</sup> Notice by the surety cannot operate instantly, but the right must be exercised reasonably.<sup>78</sup>

Sufficiency of notice. The notice requisite to terminate future liability must be definite and unequivocal,<sup>79</sup> and it must be received by the creditor or obligee,<sup>80</sup> although notice to an agent has been held sufficient.<sup>81</sup> Formal notice by the surety is not required unless stipulated for in the contract;<sup>82</sup> and even if it is so stipulated for, it may be waived.<sup>83</sup>

§ 132. Transfer of Subject Matter and Security in General

The transfer of property by the principal ordinarily does not of itself discharge the surety.

The transfer of property by the principal does not discharge the surety,<sup>84</sup> especially where the principal is not released.<sup>85</sup> Where a builder gives completion bonds providing that the buildings should be fully constructed and completed in accordance with specifications, but the obligee fails to advance the promised funds to the builder, the builder is excused from performance, with respect to the right of an assignee of the bonds to recover from the surety.<sup>86</sup>

Second assignment

In a materialman's action against a bonding company on a bond to secure a street paving contract, where it appeared that the contractors had assigned certain monthly payments to the paving company, the fact that the contractors subsequently assigned such payments to a third person did not release the bonding company, the mere act of assignment constituting no actionable wrong to the company in the absence of a showing of collection by the third person.—Mack Mfg. Co. v. Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co., 102 S.E. 499, 114 S.C. 207.

Assignee or obligee

Fact that assignments of completion bonds and consents to assignments were executed before delivery of bonds did not amount to a technical flaw in the assignments, where the delivery of bonds preceded delivery of assignments to assignee, but even if assignments had become effective before bonds were delivered, the bonds would still have been assignable as future interest, and, where builder furnished completion bonds naming lender as obligee and builder and surety consented to assignments, the purported assignee was not a direct obligee but his rights were derived by assignment.—Provident Trust Co. of Philadelphia v. Metropolitan Cas. Ins. Co. of N. Y., supra.

A payment under a contract made in violation of its terms,<sup>87</sup> as, for example, after the contract has been abandoned,<sup>88</sup> discharges the surety where it is made without his consent; the extent of the discharge is limited, in some cases, to the amount of the unauthorized payments.<sup>89</sup> The rule, however, has been held not to apply in the case of payments made under mistake of fact<sup>90</sup> or under circumstances not increasing the surety's risk or liability,<sup>91</sup> or where the surety has acquiesced therein,<sup>92</sup> or, as discussed infra § 136, has otherwise waived his rights. The surety is discharged by material alterations changing the medium or manner of payment<sup>93</sup> or the amount of particular payments.<sup>94</sup> A surety cannot successfully claim to be discharged by reason of alteration of, or departure from, the provisions of the contract respecting payment where there has in fact been no such alteration or departure.<sup>95</sup>

Restrictions imposed by statute. Where a statute places restrictions on payments under contracts of a specified kind, payments made in violation of the statute will discharge the surety;<sup>96</sup> but a surety will not be discharged by a payment to a person having a claim especially protected by statute.<sup>97</sup>

b. Building and Construction Contracts

Material alterations of, or departures from, the terms of a building or construction contract respecting payment ordinarily will discharge the surety; according to some authorities, such discharge is only pro tanto, that is, only to the extent to which the surety is injured or prejudiced.

While immaterial changes or departures from the terms of the contract with respect to payment do not discharge the surety,<sup>98</sup> subject to the limitations and qualifications of the rule respecting the effects of alteration or modification of building contracts on the surety's liability generally, as discussed supra § 126, material changes or departures from the terms of the contract respecting payment will discharge the surety<sup>99</sup> if made without his consent;<sup>1</sup> and it is immaterial that one of the effects of the change is the elimination of a provision that would have rendered the contract unenforceable.<sup>2</sup> Thus, the surety will be discharged where there is a material alteration or departure consisting of payments made prematurely or in excess of the amount due at the time,<sup>3</sup> or in the absence of the receipts for materials and labor required by the contract,<sup>4</sup> or by a material change increasing the amount to be paid the contractor.<sup>5</sup>

It is generally held that payment to the principal without certificates or estimates of the architect or engineer as required by the contract<sup>6</sup> or in excess of the amounts due on the estimates<sup>7</sup> discharges the surety. It has been held, however, that a provision for payments on certificates of the superintending architect is only for the benefit of the owner, which benefit may be waived by him,<sup>8</sup> and that a payment without a certificate does not release the surety, if it is actually due at the time, or otherwise does not prejudice the surety,<sup>9</sup> as where the payments are actually used to pay for labor and materials in the building.<sup>10</sup> The surety is not discharged where the owner pays on certiicates of the architect in accordance with the terms of the contract, although it later develops that the certificates were for greater sums than were actually due.<sup>11</sup>

The payment to the builder, without the surety's consent, of a percentage that, under the bond or the building contract, should be reserved until the completion of the work for which the bond was given, discharges the sureties;<sup>12</sup> and this has also been held to be true where the owner does not comply with a statutory provision requiring him to retain a certain percentage of the contract price for the payment of artisans and mechanics,<sup>13</sup> but it has been held that such a requirement of the bond does not apply to payments made, after the contractor's default, in completing the building and in discharging liens.<sup>14</sup> Where the owner has

Surety's consent to payment

Premature payment will not release surety, where made with surety's knowledge and acquiescence, or at his request.—Federal Surety Co. v. White, 295 P. 281, 88 Colo. 238.

Necessity of injury to surety

(1) If the payment is one on which the obligee bases his right of recovery, so that making it prematurely constitutes it an alteration of the obligation, the surety is released without any showing of injury, but, if the payment is one on which the obligee is not relying for recovery, the obligee cannot recover unless the payment has injuriously affected his rights.—Pacific Coast Engineering Co. v. Detroit Fidelity & Surety Co., 5 P.2d 888, 214 Cal. 384.

(2) So, the owner's alleged violation of the contract in making premature payments to the contractor did not release the surety from liability for damages resulting from the use of faulty workmanship and material where the contract provided that neither the final certificate nor payment should relieve the contractor of responsibility for faulty materials or workmanship.—American Employers' Ins. Co. v. Huddleston, Civ.App., 39 S.W.2d 952, affirmed 70 S.W.2d 696, 123 Tex. 285.

Materiality of premature payment

In order to release the surety, the overpayment, that is, the amount that is paid in excess of the amount due at the time, must be of such an amount relative to the whole contract, or to that part of it left undone, that it can be said that a material incentive to the completion of the contract has been done away with to the detriment of the surety.

—Federal Surety Co. v. White, 295 P. 281, 88 Colo. 238.

Deduction of sums owing to obligee

an option rather than a duty to retain a percentage of the contract price he may waive such privilege without affecting the liability of the surety.<sup>15</sup>

The rule that an unauthorized or premature payment to the contractor discharges the surety has been held to apply, even though such payment is necessary to enable the contractor to complete the work;<sup>16</sup> but there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>17</sup> since the rule is sometimes laid down that a surety cannot complain of an advance made while the work is in progress which assists the contractor to perform and which is deducted at or before the time of the last payment.<sup>18</sup> In conformity with the view, as discussed supra § 126, that the surety will not be discharged by alterations of, or departures from, provisions of the contract unless the surety is injured thereby, it is held that the surety will not be discharged by premature payments to the contractor, where the money paid has been entirely applied to payment of claims for labor and materials for which the surety is liable under the bond.<sup>19</sup>

Where the contract guaranteed by the surety is silent as to the time of payment, a change respecting the time for payment from the terms of a collateral agreement between the contractor and the creditor does not discharge the surety.<sup>20</sup> Retention, by the owner, of money owing to the contractor, to pay debts of the latter, does not discharge the sureties;<sup>21</sup> nor are the sureties discharged because payment was made by the owner to the principal while there were claims unpaid, in the absence of any term in the contract forbidding it,<sup>22</sup> or by other payments which do not prejudice the sureties' interests.<sup>23</sup>

The surety cannot successfully claim to be discharged on the ground of alteration of, or departure from, the provisions of the contract with respect to payment where there has been no such alteration or departure and the owner or other obligee has acted in conformity with the contract,<sup>24</sup> or where the bond expressly provides that such alteration or departure shall not release the surety.<sup>25</sup> However, the fact that the contract provides for changes in the structure does not authorize a change as to the method and amount of the payments without the consent of the sureties.<sup>26</sup> Premature pay-

Reputation by surety

The provision of subcontract for retention of ten per cent of monthly architect's estimates was a security for performance, and, when subcontractor became unable to perform and his surety renounced his obligation, the owner was entitled to use security for his own and surety's benefit in completing contract, and such use of the reserved percentages did not discharge surety.—Knutson v. #### Retention of more than contractual minimum

Where a surety bond provided for a retention of part of the contract price, not less than ten per cent, and the contract did not stipulate any amount to be retained, the retention by the obligee of five thousand dollars out of seventeen thousand seven hundred fifty dollars did not release the surety.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Owner of building, on subcontractor's service of cautionary notices, was not obligated to withhold moneys due contractor to cover payment of subcontractor's claims, where contract expressly provided that on failure of contractor to pay for materials and labor, owner would have recourse to the bond.—Columbia Casualty Co. v. ment does not release the surety as against third-party beneficiaries under the bond;<sup>27</sup> and where, as in the case of a public building, the surety's bond is required by statute, runs to the people of the state and is conditioned to pay, if the contractor does not, for the material and labor, the surety is not discharged by an alteration in the contract between the contractor and the owner, respecting the time or manner of paying the contractor.<sup>28</sup>

Extent of discharge. Authorities holding that a material variance with respect to payment to a contractor discharges the surety whether or not he is prejudiced or injured thereby naturally hold that such a variance discharges the surety entirely and not merely pro tanto.<sup>29</sup> Among authorities holding that the surety is not discharged by a variance with respect to payment unless he is prejudiced or injured, some hold, or at least do not appear to question, that the surety is entirely discharged in case of such a variance,<sup>30</sup> but others hold, at least in the case of a paid surety, that the discharge is only pro tanto,<sup>31</sup> at least where the payment does not constitute an inducement to abandon the work;<sup>32</sup> and under the latter view, even where the bond provides that alterations in the terms of the contract or in the work done thereunder should not release the surety from liability, such provision does not prevent the surety from defending pro tanto for his actual injury or prejudice resulting from alterations with respect to payment.<sup>33</sup>

§ 134. — Payments before Due under Contract

As a general rule, a payment made to the principal before it is due under the contract will discharge the surety.

Conformably to the rules governing the effect of premature payment on the liability of a surety under a building and construction contract, as discussed supra § 133 b, a payment made before it is due under the principal contract in general without the surety's consent ordinarily will release the surety,<sup>34</sup> where the payment is one on which the obligee seeks recovery so as to constitute the premature payment an alteration of the obligation,<sup>35</sup> unless the bond in express terms provides that it shall not,<sup>36</sup> or the payment has been fraudulently induced under circumstances for which the surety is directly or indirectly responsible.<sup>37</sup> The surety will not be released where the payment, as made, does not violate the terms of the contract,<sup>38</sup> or where the rights of the surety are not prejudiced,<sup>39</sup> at least, according to some authorities, where the premature payment is one on which the obligee is

Reason for rule

The purpose of such a provision is to avoid the severity of the common-law rule that an alteration fully releases the surety regardless of injury or prejudice; it is a recognition of the trend of modern decisions to the effect that a departure from the terms of the contract releases a compensated surety only where and to the extent that the surety is injured.

not relying for a recovery,<sup>40</sup> or where provisions as to the time of payment intended solely for the benefit of the obligee are waived by him.<sup>41</sup> The general rule discharging a surety for unauthorized payments does not apply to payments not covered by the contract,<sup>42</sup> or to payments made in discharging the particular obligations which the surety's bond is expressly made to cover,<sup>43</sup> or for which the surety would otherwise be held liable.<sup>44</sup>

§ 135. — Advances or Loans

A mere advancement or loan is not a payment which, if made contrary to the terms of the contract, will affect the surety's liability.

A mere advancement or loan is not a payment which, if made contrary to the contract, will affect the surety's liability,<sup>45</sup> even though it is stipulated that the loan shall be repaid out of the next payment under the contract.<sup>46</sup> Whether a transaction is a payment or loan depends on the circumstances as revealing the intent of the parties.<sup>47</sup>

In the case of a building and construction contract the same rule applies, namely, that a mere advancement or loan from the owner to the builder is not a payment so that, if unauthorized, it will discharge the surety.<sup>48</sup> So, the surety is not discharged where money transferred by the owner to the builder is merely a loan independent of the contract price and is not paid on the amount due the contractor for his work;<sup>49</sup> and on the other hand, the surety cannot be held liable for the amount of such loan if it is not repaid by the builder.<sup>50</sup> Where a contract provides for advances by a loan company to a contractor for the purposes of erecting a building, the surety on a bond guaranteeing completion of the building is not released from liability to the obligee, the loan company, on the ground that the company made advances prematurely, where in fact the advances complained of were not made earlier than authorized by the contract;<sup>51</sup> moreover, even though some advances under such a contract were premature the surety is not released in the absence of prejudice.<sup>52</sup>

§ 136. — Waiver or Estoppel

A departure from the terms of the contract respecting payment will not discharge a surety who has waived such terms or his rights thereunder.

A surety is not discharged by a departure from the provisions of the contract or bond respecting payment, where he has waived such provisions or his rights thereunder.<sup>53</sup>

Facts held not to constitute waiver

Where construction contract and contractor's bond required contractor to attach paid bills and affidavits that materials and work had been fully paid for to drafts drawn by contractor against obligee on bank, and provided that provisions of bond could not be altered without written consent of surety, and drafts drawn by contractor against owner on bank, without attaching thereto such paid bills and affidavits, were paid, correspondence between surety and obligee, wherein surety reserved all rights and defenses, was not a "waiver" of surety's right to insist on owner's compliance with contract.—Mauney v. Performance by a stranger will not be compliance with the contract.<sup>60</sup>

§ 138. Building Contract

When a building and construction contract has been fully performed, there can be no liability on a surety bond given to secure its faithful performance.

When a building and construction contract has been fully performed, there can be no liability on a surety bond given to secure its faithful performance.<sup>61</sup> The sufficiency of performance of a contract is discussed in Contracts §§ 494-515, and the scope and extent of liability of a surety of a building contract are considered supra §§ 90-115.

§ 139. Payment of Debt Secured

b. Sufficiency and medium of payment

a. In General

Payment and discharge of the principal debt, no matter by whom made, discharge the surety.

Payment and discharge of the principal debt, no matter by whom made, discharge the surety.<sup>62</sup>

However, in order to discharge the surety, payment of the principal debt or obligation must be valid and binding,<sup>63</sup> and, if the creditor is for any reason forced to refund the payment, the liability of the surety is restored.<sup>64</sup> Thus, a surety is not, as a general rule, released by payment which is illegal because it is a preference in violation of the Bankruptcy Act, and which the creditor is obliged to refund.<sup>65</sup> It has been held that, if the creditor is aware of the illegal preference at the time he receives payment, the surety is discharged,<sup>66</sup> although there is some authority to the contrary.<sup>67</sup>

b. Sufficiency and Medium of Payment

(1) In general

(2) Payment in commercial paper

(1) In General

It is not requisite that payment in order to discharge a surety should be in cash; any arrangement, in good faith, between the principal and obligee whereby the obligation is considered paid, is sufficient.

Under the general rules relating to payment, as discussed in Payment §§ 3-37, it is not requisite that payment, in order to discharge a surety, should be in cash; any arrangement, in good faith, between the principal and the obligee, whereby the obligation is considered paid, is sufficient.<sup>68</sup> Payment is sufficient where it is made to an unauthorized agent, if it is ratified by the creditor.<sup>69</sup> The surety is not required to pay at a particular place unless his contract so requires,<sup>70</sup> although the principal may have so bound himself by a separate contract.<sup>71</sup>

Payment in property. Payment made by the principal in property, personal<sup>72</sup> or real,<sup>73</sup> will discharge the surety if accepted in extinguishment of the debt. Where the principal and obligee in good faith have placed a value on the property, such value will govern.<sup>74</sup> Where, however, the obligee is not authorized to receive anything but money, payment in property will not discharge the surety;<sup>75</sup> and, if property received in settlement is taken from the creditor owing to the superior rights of third persons, the sureties are not released.<sup>76</sup>

Conditional payment. A conditional payment does not discharge the surety on the original indebtedness.<sup>77</sup>

Seizure or levy. A seizure or levy on property of the principal, sufficient to pay the debt, is a satisfaction of it, and a surety is released.<sup>78</sup> However a sale, under execution, of property which was supposed by the creditor to belong to the principal, but which does not, will not discharge a surety who has not been misled to his prejudice.<sup>79</sup> An attachment against the property of the principal will not discharge a surety until applied in payment.<sup>80</sup>

(2) Payment in Commercial Paper

Where a note, bond, or draft is accepted as payment, the surety is discharged.

In accordance with the general rules as to payment by bill or note, as discussed in Payment § 23, in the absence of agreement, a note given for the debt by the principal<sup>81</sup> or by the surety<sup>82</sup> does not constitute payment of such debt. Where, however, the note is accepted as payment, the surety is discharged,<sup>83</sup> and, if the obligee accepts a note of the principal in payment of a loss, a surety is discharged, although the obligee was ignorant of his right to proceed against the surety.<sup>84</sup> A surety will be discharged if the creditor or obligee accepts a bond<sup>85</sup> or a draft<sup>86</sup> as payment; but it is otherwise if the draft is not considered payment unless it in turn is paid.<sup>87</sup> However, a nonnegotiable draft or note of the principal<sup>88</sup> or an unenforceable note<sup>89</sup> is not payment discharging the surety.

Payment by the note of a third person will discharge a surety,<sup>90</sup> but not if the obligee is induced by fraud to take one which is worthless, and he repudiates the transaction,<sup>91</sup> or the note is a forgery.<sup>92</sup>

Check. Where the creditor takes a check of the principal, which would have been paid if presented promptly, but which is retained by the creditor until there are not sufficient funds in the bank to meet it, a surety for the debt for which the check was given is discharged;<sup>93</sup> but by taking a worthless check the creditor does not release a surety if the latter is notified of its dishonor in time to protect himself.<sup>94</sup> A check subsequently paid constitutes payment discharging the surety.<sup>95</sup>

§ 140. — Payment by Principal in General

Payment of the debt by the principal discharges the surety.

Payment of the debt by the principal discharges the surety,<sup>96</sup> and the indebtedness cannot be kept alive against the latter.<sup>97</sup> The rule applies, even though payment was made with money borrowed by the principal for the purpose of paying the debt and under an understanding with the lender that the debt should be kept alive against the surety.<sup>98</sup> In accordance with the rule that a mere deposit of money in a bank on which a negotiable instrument is drawn or at which it is payable does not constitute payment if the instrument has not been presented or left at such bank for collection, as discussed in Bills and Notes § 442 c (2), the mere deposit of money sufficient to pay a negotiable instrument, which was not presented for payment, by the maker in the bank at which the instrument was payable is not a payment which relieves the surety of liability.<sup>99</sup>

§ 141. — Payment by Surety in General

Payment by the surety is a complete defense to an action for the debt brought against him by the creditor or obligee.

Payment by the surety is a complete defense to an action for the debt brought against him by the creditor or obligee.<sup>1</sup> However, payment by a cosurety of his proportionate share does not release him as to the remainder.<sup>2</sup>

Supplemental surety. Since a surety occupies the relationship of principal to a supplemental surety, as discussed infra § 386, payment by the surety will discharge the supplemental surety.<sup>3</sup> The liability of the supplemental surety cannot be continued by the surety's taking an assignment of the debt.<sup>4</sup>

Payment to one of several creditors is a discharge of the surety as to all.<sup>5</sup>

§ 142. — Payment by Third Person

Payment of the principal obligation by a third person will release the surety from liability.

Payment of the principal obligation by a third person will release the surety from liability.<sup>6</sup> However, a third person's purchase of the debt, as distinguished from a payment, will not discharge the surety,<sup>7</sup> but in order to operate as a purchase, it is necessary that the creditor receive the money with knowledge that it is not payment.<sup>8</sup> Where the object is purchase and not payment, the person furnishing the money can allow the principal to act for him in procuring an assignment.<sup>9</sup>

§ 143. — Partial Payment

Partial payment does not discharge the surety completely, but it is a discharge of his liability to the extent of the payment made.

Partial payment does not discharge the surety completely.<sup>10</sup> It is, however, a discharge of his liability to the extent of the payment made,<sup>11</sup> as where the surety is discharged pro tanto by payment from

§ 144. — Application of Payments

- a. Surety's right to control
- b. Application by court
- c. Effect of application

a. Surety's Right to Control

- (1) In general
- (2) Where special equities exist
- (3) Effect of contract

(1) In General

In the absence of agreement or equities in favor of the surety, he cannot control the application of the payments to that portion of the indebtedness of the principal for which he is surety.

In the absence of agreement<sup>16</sup> or equities in favor of the surety,<sup>17</sup> he cannot compel the application of payments to that portion of the indebtedness of the principal for which he is surety.<sup>18</sup> Where the debtor designates the application of payments, his designation is controlling with respect to the surety.<sup>19</sup> Where the debtor does not designate the application of payments, the creditor may apply them to any portion of the indebtedness, as discussed in Payment § 57, and the surety has no right to insist on application to the debt for which he is liable.<sup>20</sup> It makes no difference that the surety was not aware of the existence of any other indebtedness of the principal than that for which the surety became liable.<sup>21</sup>

Running accounts. Where the indebtedness of the principal is a running account, for some of the items of which a surety is liable, the creditor is not under obligation to apply payments to the oldest items.<sup>22</sup>

(2) Where Special Equities Exist

The surety can control the application of payments where circumstances exist giving him an equity superior to the usual rights of the debtor and creditor with respect to the application of payments.

The surety can control application of payments where circumstances exist giving him an equity superior to the usual legal rights of the debtor and creditor with respect to application of payments.<sup>23</sup> Thus, the surety can compel application of payments to the portion of the indebtedness for which he is liable where the payment, to the knowledge of the creditor,<sup>24</sup> is derived from a source from which it would be a fraud on the surety to permit diversion of the funds to a different purpose.<sup>25</sup> For example, the surety can control application of payments where the money is the surety's and is paid to the principal to pay to the creditor<sup>26</sup> or where the surety has a lien on the property from which the funds for payment are derived.<sup>27</sup>

Application of moneys secured. Ordinarily, it is held that the surety has an equity entitling him to have payments applied to the secured debt where the specific moneys paid to the creditor are the very moneys for which the surety is bound,<sup>28</sup> as where a surety has become responsible for the payment of money by the principal, and the latter receives money under his contract, which he pays over, and it is held that the creditor or obligee has no right to apply such payments in any other way than to the relief of the surety.<sup>29</sup> This rule is generally qualified by a limitation to the effect that the creditor must have knowledge of the source of the money,<sup>30</sup> and, where the creditor is ignorant of the source of the money, he may apply the payment on an unsecured debt.<sup>31</sup> Other authorities deny the rule al-

50 C.J. p 105 note 96.

Duty to apply

There is no trust attaching to monthly payments made to contractor which prevents his using them generally as his own, but, when he pays them over to materialman who knows their source, there is a duty to apply money for payment of those materials furnished the job rather than to some other debt.—R. P. Farnsworth & Co. v. Electrical Supply Co., C.C.A. La., 112 F.2d 150, 130 A.L.R. 192, rehearing denied 113 F.2d 111, 130 A.L.R. 197, certiorari denied 61 S.Ct. 139, 311 U.S. 700, 85 L.Ed. 454.

(1) Materialman, although he knew money received from subcontractor to meet pay rolls and evidenced by notes and repaid with interest was borrowed from general contractor who knew it was to be paid to materialman, was not obligated to apply such money to discharge pro tanto contractor's liability for labor and material under statutory payment bond and subcontractor's authorization to set aside funds to guarantee payment to materialman, since transactions between materialman and subcontractor were "loans" and not "payments."—U. S., to Use of Par-Lock Applicators of New Jersey v. J. A. J. Const. Co., C.C.A.Pa., 187 F.2d 584.

(2) Bank which, after advancing money for material bill under agreement for reimbursement, applied installment of contract price on bill, with surety's knowledge, was held not chargeable with diverting contract funds.—Third Nat. Bank v. Detroit Fidelity & Surety Co., C.C.A. Fla., 65 F.2d 548, certiorari denied Detroit Fidelity & Surety Co. v. Third Nat. Bank, 54 S.Ct. 88, 290 U.S. 667, 78 L.Ed. 577.

(3) Fact that building loan company, as obligee in contractor's bond, applied to payment of debt deposit made by contractor in return for advance was held no defense to surety, where bond permitted application of advances to interest, since no question of application of payment is involved.—Prudence Co. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, D.C.N.Y., 2 F.Supp. 454.

together by holding, without regard to the creditor's knowledge, that he may apply the payment to an unsecured debt,<sup>32</sup> or that, even though it affirmatively appears that the creditor knew the source, he may nevertheless apply payments under the secured contract to an unsecured debt.<sup>33</sup>

(3) Effect of Contract

A contract between the creditor and the surety will control the respective rights of the parties as to the application of payments, but will not deprive the debtor of his primary right to control application or affect payments not within the contemplation of the contract.

A contract between the creditor and the surety will control the respective rights of the parties as to application of payments,<sup>34</sup> but will not deprive the debtor of his primary right to control application<sup>35</sup> or affect payments not within the contemplation of the contract.<sup>36</sup> Where the creditor has made an agreement with the surety to apply certain future payments by the principal to the indebtedness for which the surety is liable, the creditor has no right to make any other application, even with the consent of the principal.<sup>37</sup> It has been held that a contract between the debtor and creditor for application of payments to the secured debt cannot be changed to the detriment of the surety.<sup>38</sup>

b. Application by Court

Where neither the debtor nor the creditor exercises his right to control the application of payment, in some jurisdictions the court will impute payment to a debt for which the surety is bound so as to discharge the surety, but in other jurisdictions the court is not required, in the absence of superior equities, to apply the payment so as to exonerate the surety.

Where neither the debtor nor the creditor exercises his right to control application of payment, in some jurisdictions the court will impute payment to a debt for which the surety is bound so as to discharge the surety,<sup>40</sup> but in other jurisdictions, the court is not required, in the absence of superior equities, to apply the payment so as to exonerate the surety.<sup>41</sup> The equities of the surety are, however, a proper matter for consideration by the court.<sup>42</sup> The court will apply the payment as equity seems to require, usually to the oldest item,<sup>43</sup> unless the conduct of the parties indicates that payments by the principal were to be credited to later items,<sup>44</sup> as where application of the rule would result in holding a surety for a loss during a time when he was not liable for defalcations.<sup>45</sup>

Compensated surety

Where neither debtor nor creditor applied payment, a debt guaranteed by a compensated surety stands in the same category as an ordinary secured debt; since, while the creditor does not hold property of the principal debtor as security, he does hold the promise of the third person for which the principal debtor has paid, and this third person has no equity superior to that of the creditor, and there is no reason for not following the ordinary rule of applying the payment in the interest of the creditor.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Pro rata application. In some cases application will be made ratably among different debts.<sup>46</sup>

Proceeds of execution sale. Proceeds derived by a creditor from a sale of the principal's property under a claim for which the surety is not liable should not be applied to a discharge of a demand against a surety on another obligation of the judgment debtor.<sup>47</sup>

An application once made by the creditor, or by the debtor, or by both, cannot be changed as against the surety, in the absence of fraud.

An application once made by the creditor,<sup>48</sup> or by the debtor,<sup>49</sup> or by both,<sup>50</sup> cannot be changed as against the surety, in the absence of fraud.<sup>51</sup> The rule controls, although both the principal and the creditor wish to change the application.<sup>52</sup> An application made by law is controlling on the surety.<sup>53</sup>

§ 145. — Unexecuted Agreement or Negotiations as to Payment

An uncompleted agreement to pay or unexecuted negotiations looking to a settlement will not discharge the surety.

An uncompleted agreement to pay<sup>54</sup> or unexecuted negotiations looking to a settlement<sup>55</sup> will not discharge the surety.

§ 146. — Recital of Payment

A mere recital of payment, without payment in fact, will not result in a discharge of the surety, unless it constitutes ground for an estoppel.

A mere recital of payment, without payment in fact, will not result in a discharge of the surety,<sup>56</sup> unless it constitutes ground for an estoppel.<sup>57</sup>

§ 147. Tender of Payment or Performance

An unaccepted valid tender of payment or performance by the principal, or by the surety, discharges the surety.

An unaccepted valid tender of payment or performance by the principal<sup>58</sup> or by the surety<sup>59</sup> discharges the surety. In order to discharge a surety the tender must be legally sufficient<sup>60</sup> with respect to amount,<sup>61</sup> manner,<sup>62</sup> medium,<sup>63</sup> and place<sup>64</sup> of payment, and must be made in good faith.<sup>65</sup>

Keeping tender good. Tender of payment is sufficient to discharge a surety from his obligation to pay the debt tendered and refused, even though such tender is not kept good.<sup>66</sup>

C. ACTS OR CONDUCT OF CREDITOR OR OBLIGEE IN GENERAL

§ 148. General Rule

Mere indulgence, forbearance, or passiveness on the part of the creditor, where there is no duty to act, will not release the surety, but he will not be bound if the person secured does any act which violates or injures his rights, whether such injury arises from some positive act or omitting to do something which it was the duty of the creditor to perform.

The surety must be dealt with by the creditor or obligee in fairness and good faith,<sup>67</sup> and the creditor or obligee must observe the express terms and obligations of the contract,<sup>68</sup> and refrain from doing anything which alters the position or liability of surety, or increases the surety's risk.<sup>69</sup> Thus, a surety may be discharged by the fraud of the creditor or obligee;<sup>70</sup> but he is not discharged by acts of the creditor or obligee which are not inconsistent with his rights at law or in equity as a creditor, or with his relations to the surety as such,<sup>71</sup> or which the surety has advised or procured to be done by the creditor or obligee.<sup>72</sup> Mere indulgence, forbearance, or passiveness on the part of the creditor, where there is no duty to act, will not release the surety;<sup>73</sup> but he will not be bound if he is misled or deceived to his prejudice,<sup>74</sup> or if the person secured does any act which violates or injures his rights,<sup>75</sup> whether such injury arises from some

Acts not discharging surety

(1) Where subcontractor's surety indicated no desire to operate plant notwithstanding warning of April 27, reiterated on June 1, that subcontractor was not meeting contract, surety could not defeat liability on bond on ground that contractor by taking over when subcontractor abandoned contract on June 8, deprived surety of his right to take over and operate, or secure some one to take over and operate, subcontractor's plant within thirty days after notice of subcontractor's default.—Glens Falls Indem. Co. v. Basich Bros. Const. Co., C.C.A.Cal., 165 F.2d 649, certiorari denied 68 S. Ct. 1347, 334 U.S. 833, 92 L.Ed. 1760.

(2) Bank was not required to notify surety of arrangement with contractor whereby bank paid wages and took assignment of labor claims.—Third Nat. Bank v. Detroit Fidelity & Surety Co., C.C.A.Fla., 65 F.2d 548, certiorari denied Detroit Fidelity & Surety Co. v. Third Nat. Bank, 54 S.Ct. 88, 290 U.S. 667, 78 L.Ed. 577.

(3) Risk of surety on unsecured claim is not increased by creditor's failure to apply toward payment of unsecured claim, proceeds derived from levy on, and sale of, principal debtor's property under another claim against debtor.—First Nat. ## Nondisclosure of matter of defense

After the contract guaranteed has been finished, and only question between obligee and surety is as to existence and extent of breach by obligor, there is no fiduciary relationship between surety and obligee making it latter's duty to disclose to former any matter of defense.—City of Richmond, Ky., v. positive act or omitting to do something which it was the duty of the creditor to perform.<sup>76</sup> Matters which would discharge a surety before maturity of a debt will have a like effect if arising after maturity,<sup>77</sup> and, although there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>78</sup> generally whatever acts will discharge the surety before judgment will have a like effect thereafter.<sup>79</sup>

Statutory obligation. One who stands in the relationship of a surety on an obligation, who is required by statute to stand as security until certain claims are fully paid, is not released by a subsequent transaction between the principal debtor and the creditor, which does not result in the release of the debtor or the payment of the claim.<sup>80</sup>

A surety for one of two agents will not be discharged from liability to their common principal by the acts or negligence of the other.<sup>81</sup>

Consent to acts of principal. Where the creditor or obligee,<sup>82</sup> or his agent,<sup>83</sup> with some exceptions,<sup>84</sup> has consented to the acts of the principal relied on as causing the surety's liability, the creditor or obligee cannot hold the surety therefor.

Mistake as to effect of act. A mere expression of opinion by the creditor or obligee, under a mistaken conception of the law, that the surety has been discharged does not estop the creditor to hold the surety liable.<sup>85</sup> a nonperformance of the condition will discharge the surety.

Where the bond requires that there be an audit of the books and accounts of the principal at stated times, a nonperformance of the condition will discharge the surety.<sup>86</sup> However, in the absence of any stipulation in the bond requiring it, the fact that the default of the principal might have been prevented by an examination of his accounts by the obligee or by the obligee's agents will not relieve the sureties,<sup>87</sup> even though a by-law required an examination to be made,<sup>88</sup> and the surety was induced to sign the principal's bond by his knowledge of the by-laws, and his belief that they would be enforced.<sup>89</sup> Where, however, the obligee has reason to suspect the incompetency or negligence on the part of the principal so gross and habitual that, if true, his own good faith toward the sureties would call for notice from him to them, and if an examination of the accounts would verify his suspicions or show them to be groundless, he has then a duty toward his surety to examine the accounts.<sup>90</sup> generally the failure to comply with the condition will prevent recovery from the surety.

Although it has been stated that, where the obligation of the surety is a continuing one, the creditor must give notice to the surety of conduct of the principal indicating bad faith, moral turpitude, or unfitness for trust,<sup>91</sup> and a failure to do so will release the surety from further liability,<sup>92</sup> a surety is not discharged from further liability, generally, on failure of the obligee to notify him of his principal's default, where the suretyship contract contains no stipulation that such notice shall be given.<sup>93</sup> However, if the contract of suretyship stipulates that such notice shall be given, the general rule is that failure to comply with the condition will prevent recovery from the surety;<sup>94</sup> although, even where the bond requires notice, the surety is not discharged by a failure to give notice of slight defaults,<sup>95</sup> which are waived by the obligee;<sup>96</sup> or on mere suspicion of possible default;<sup>97</sup> or where, under the terms of the contract, there is no default;<sup>98</sup> or where, if a default exists, there is excuse<sup>99</sup> or provision in the suretyship contract exempting the surety for liability therefor,<sup>1</sup> or where the surety already has

Bond and original contract must be construed together.—Shaw v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co., 164 A. 316, 310 Pa. 213.

Compensated surety

Where bond of compensated surety is ambiguous with respect to what constitutes default, strict enforcement of forfeiture for failure to give notice of default should not be permitted.—Shaw v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co., supra.

Where the contract forbids all interference by the owner with the work, except as he is furnished with a certificate from the architect that there has been default on the part of the builder, the surety of the builder cannot be relieved of his liability on his bond, of which the building contract is made a part, by reason of the failure of the owner to notify the surety of the builder's default, as required by the bond, where the owner never receives from the architect any certificate of default.—McCreery v. National Surety Co., 75 A. 674, 226 Pa. 450.

Necessity of proof of loss. Where the stipulation is construed as intended merely to protect the surety from avoidable loss, failure to give notice does not discharge the sureties unless loss is shown,<sup>3</sup> and then only to the extent of the loss proved.<sup>4</sup> This rule requiring loss to be proved is especially applicable to compensated sureties<sup>5</sup> or to sureties not on the same basis as gratuitous sureties,<sup>6</sup> unless notice is made a condition precedent to the surety's liability, as discussed infra § 253. A compensated surety will not be discharged for failure to notify him of the principal's uncompleted performance within the time specified, where time is not of the essence of the contract, and no claim is made against principal or surety on account of the delayed performance.<sup>7</sup>

Partial failure to notify. Where there is a failure to give notice of some defaults, but notice of others is seasonably given, the failure, while effective as a bar to the surety's liability for the earlier defaults, does not relieve him from liability for the others,<sup>8</sup> especially where no claim is made against the surety with respect to the earlier defaults.<sup>9</sup> Furthermore, if notice is given to some sureties but not to others, the liability of the sureties notified will not be affected by failure to give notice to the others, where by its terms the bond is joint and several.<sup>10</sup>

b. Time for Notice

Notice of default when required must be given within the time, if any, specified in the contract, or, if no time is specified, within a reasonable time.

Notice of default when required must be given within the time, if any, specified in the contract,<sup>11</sup> or, if no time, or no definite time, is specified, within a reasonable time,<sup>12</sup> as where the contract provides for immediate notice.<sup>13</sup> The time does not begin to run against the obligee until he knows, or has had reasonable opportunity to know, of the principal's default,<sup>14</sup> and knowledge within the meaning of this rule is actual knowledge.<sup>15</sup> The time runs, however, from the date of actual knowledge, and not from a later date of formal notice of default.<sup>16</sup> Where time is not of the essence of the contract secured and no claim is made by the obligee for failure to perform on time, the surety is not released because notice of default is not given within the time specified in the suretyship contract, computing such time from the date fixed in the contract secured for its completion.<sup>17</sup>

Provision held void

Under statute providing that no stipulation in contract, requiring notice to be given of claim for damages as condition precedent to right to sue, shall be valid unless it is reasonable, and that any stipulation for less than ninety days shall be void, bond requiring that notice be given surety immediately is void.—*Employers' Liability Assur. Prior to default. Notice need not be given until there is an actual default,<sup>18</sup> although it may be given prior to an actual default where so close thereto as to make it substantially a notice of the default and where the certainty of the impending default is established.<sup>19</sup> On the other hand, a notice so far in advance of a possible default as to be unrelated thereto is insufficient.<sup>20</sup>

c. Sufficiency of Notice

Notice is sufficient where it is in accordance with the terms of the contract, but actual notice may suffice, although not in conformity with the contract in all respects.

Notice is sufficient where it is in accordance with the terms of the contract,<sup>21</sup> but actual notice may suffice, although not in conformity with the contract in all respects.<sup>22</sup> A requirement of verified notice does not require that it be sworn to.<sup>23</sup> A letter, if not objected to on the ground of absence of more detailed proof, satisfies a requirement of notice of default and written proof.<sup>24</sup>

d. Waiver and Estoppel as to Notice

Notice of default may be waived, and a surety may be estopped to defend on the ground of failure to notify of the original default.

Notice of default may be waived,<sup>25</sup> for example, by provisions of the suretyship contract,<sup>26</sup> or by subsequent correspondence between the parties,<sup>27</sup> or by acquiescence by the surety having knowledge of the breach in the contractor's continuing to act under the contract.<sup>28</sup> Acknowledgment by the surety of receipt of notice of default from the creditor constitutes a waiver of notice in the particular method or within the time prescribed by the bond.<sup>29</sup> A surety who signs the suretyship contract after default in performance of the guaranteed contract thereby acquiesces in the extension of time allowed for performance and is estopped to defend on the ground of failure to notify of the original default.<sup>30</sup> A surety company will be bound by waiver of its general agent,<sup>31</sup> notwithstanding a contract provision against waiver, except by writing executed by the president or vice president under the corporate seal.<sup>32</sup>

§ 151. Failure to Terminate Employment after Default or Dishonest Conduct

Where the suretyship contract guarantees the faithful performance of duties by an agent or servant, the obligee's continuance of the agent or servant in his employment after knowledge of the latter's default or dishonest conduct will discharge the surety from liability for loss arising from subsequent dishonesty or default, but mere negligence on the part of the obligee in acquiring information does not operate to discharge the surety.

faithful performance of duties by an agent or servant, the obligee's continuance of the agent or servant in his employment after knowledge of the latter's default or dishonest conduct will discharge the surety from liability for loss arising from subsequent dishonesty or defalcations;<sup>33</sup> but mere negligence on the part of the obligee in acquiring information does not operate to discharge the surety.<sup>34</sup> The surety, however, remains liable for all the defaults committed prior to the obligee's discovery.<sup>35</sup> When a person employed commits an act of dishonesty or is unfaithful to his trust, the employer may end the contract for his own protection, and what he may do and ought to do for his own sake the surety may require to be done for his;<sup>36</sup> but if, after notice to or knowledge on the part of the surety of the default or dishonesty of the agent or servant, he consents to the obligee's continued employment of the agent or servant, the surety remains liable for subsequent defaults,<sup>37</sup> subject to performance of any conditions attached to the continued obligation.<sup>38</sup> The burden is on the surety to show that the obligee had knowledge of the employee's default and continued the employment without notifying the surety thereof.<sup>39</sup>

Employees of corporation. Where the obligee is a corporation, and an officer of the corporation is the one against whom knowledge of the employee's faithlessness is proved, it is held in some jurisdictions that the general rule applies, and that the surety is discharged,<sup>40</sup> unless the officer having knowledge is an officer of a distinct corporation subsidiary to, or a branch of, the obligee corporation.<sup>41</sup> In other jurisdictions, it is held that the surety is not discharged, even though knowledge of default is brought home to some of the officers of the obligee.<sup>42</sup>

this rule is held to have no application to cases of mere breach of duty or contract obligations by the servant or agent not involving dishonesty or want of integrity on his part, or fraud or concealment on the part of the master or employer.<sup>43</sup> There is no active duty on the employer either to notify the sureties or to dismiss the agent or employee for a mere default which does not in itself involve dishonesty,<sup>44</sup> or to give notice of a mere failure to report or account punctually, or turn over or remit funds, under the terms of the contract, the performance of which is secured, unless there is knowledge of an actual defalcation.<sup>45</sup> Other authorities hold that, where the incompetency or negligence on the part of a servant is so gross or habitual that good faith to the sureties requires the master to discharge the servant or at least give notice to the sureties,<sup>46</sup> or where the employee's breach of the employment contract, whether by dishonesty or not, justifies the dismissal by the employer or master,<sup>47</sup> a continuance of the employment without notice to the surety discharges the latter from further liability.

§ 152. Nonperformance of Conditions; Prevention of Performance

- a. Nonperformance of conditions
- b. Prevention of performance

a. Nonperformance of Conditions

If the surety has annexed conditions, to be performed by the creditor or obligee after the contract has been entered into, a failure to perform them releases the surety from liability.

whether the obligee is or is not negligent,<sup>49</sup> and the principal cannot waive performance.<sup>50</sup> Thus, if the surety has entered into his contract under an agreement providing for security for himself,<sup>51</sup> or has stipulated that a demand be made on the principal,<sup>52</sup> or on the surety,<sup>53</sup> or that demand be made at a particular place,<sup>54</sup> or has stipulated that the principal shall be prosecuted criminally,<sup>55</sup> he cannot be held liable if the conditions have not been fulfilled. In order to relieve the surety, however, the creditor or obligee must have notice of the conditions,<sup>56</sup> and the surety is not relieved by nonperformance of an agreement made with him by the principal, with which the creditor or obligee is not connected,<sup>57</sup> or by the breach of an independent agreement between the creditor and the principal.<sup>58</sup>

A substantial compliance with conditions is sufficient, if they are performed as fully as the circumstances will allow.<sup>59</sup> Failure to observe provisions in statutes, which are directory merely, will not discharge a surety,<sup>60</sup> nor will failure by a creditor or obligee to observe provisions in the contract which were inserted for the benefit of the latter,<sup>61</sup> or which were inserted for the benefit of the principal,<sup>62</sup> or if they consist of restrictions so unreasonable as practically to amount to a release by tending to defeat recovery.<sup>63</sup>

Placing principal in default. Where the principal is not in default until he has been placed in default by the creditor serving notice on him to perform, a failure to give sufficient notice will discharge the surety,<sup>64</sup> the form and requisites of such notice depending on the terms and requirements of the contract.<sup>65</sup> However, where the default is in no way dependent on notice, the failure of the creditor to send, or of the principal to receive, notice does not discharge the surety.<sup>66</sup>

Building contracts. In accordance with general rules the sureties on a builder's bond are discharged unless there is a compliance with the conditions imposed by the bond,<sup>67</sup> such as a condition that there shall be notice of the commencement of the work,<sup>68</sup> or a condition that liens be released,<sup>69</sup> or as to giving additional bonds.<sup>70</sup> However, compliance with the formal requirements as to the mode of annulling the contract if the contractor fails to prosecute the work diligently in the judgment of a designated official is not a prerequisite to the maintenance of an action on the contractor's bond, where he has refused to proceed with the work;<sup>71</sup> and it has ing denied and modified on other grounds 249 N.W. 72, 211 Wis. 613. 50 C.J. p 166 note 81.

Duty of surety

Extension of time for performance

The sureties on a building contractor's bond cannot defeat recovery on the ground that the contractor was not allowed extensions of time because of various delays, where there was no showing that requests for extension were made except in one instance and no evidence of any failure or refusal to grant an extension where the claim was made and pressed.—Price v. Seibel, App., 253 S.W. 212, certiobeen held that, as the owner may waive any delay on the part of the contractor, the surety is not released by the owner's failure to give him immediate notice of the failure of the contractor to complete the building in the time specified.<sup>72</sup> Furthermore, where the conditions inserted in the contract are for the benefit of the contractor, a waiver of such conditions by the contractor does not release the surety.<sup>73</sup> However, as to the condition that insurance shall be procured by the owner, some decisions hold that a failure to procure the insurance discharges the surety,<sup>74</sup> while other decisions hold that the failure to procure insurance does not discharge the surety if there is no loss which such insurance would have covered.<sup>75</sup>

Where performance of the contract secured is rendered impossible by the act of the creditor or obligee, the sureties are discharged, since the surety cannot be held liable for the nonperformance of the contract resulting from some act or omission on the part of the creditor or obligee.

Where performance of the contract secured is rendered impossible by the act of the creditor or obligee, the sureties are discharged,<sup>76</sup> since the surety cannot be held liable for the nonperformance of the contract resulting from some act or omission on the part of the creditor or obligee.<sup>77</sup> A surety on the recognizance of a debtor is discharged if the creditor enjoins further proceedings;<sup>78</sup> and a surety on a forthcoming bond is released if the creditor seizes and sells the property for which the bond was given.<sup>79</sup> However, mere delay or interference in the performance of the contract by the

§ 153. Reservation of Rights

A transaction between the principal and the creditor or obligee, which otherwise would operate to discharge the surety, will not, as a general rule, have that effect if the creditor or obligee reserves all rights against the surety, or reserves the right to sue the principal, at the request of the surety.

A transaction between the principal and the creditor or obligee, which otherwise would operate to discharge a surety, will not, as a general rule, have that effect if the creditor or obligee reserves all rights against the surety,<sup>81</sup> or reserves the right to sue the principal, at the request of the surety,<sup>82</sup> the effect of such reservation being to make the agreement with the principal conditional on the consent of the surety.<sup>83</sup> In fairness and honesty, the reservation agreement should in terms reserve not only the creditor's right against the surety, but the surety's right against the principal as well.<sup>84</sup> The reservation cannot be made at a time later than that of the transaction which discharged the surety.<sup>85</sup> Notice to the surety of the reservation is not necessary.<sup>86</sup> If the negotiations between the principal and the creditor have resulted in an absolute discharge or abandonment of the contract, a reservation against a surety would be unavailing, since there would be no rights to reserve.<sup>87</sup>

§ 154. Taking Additional Security or Substitution of Collateral Securities

eral rule substitution of collateral will not discharge the surety in the absence of injury in fact.

A surety is not discharged by the act of the creditor or obligee in taking additional security,<sup>88</sup> or receiving possession of property of the principal, although it is sufficient to pay the debt.<sup>89</sup> This rule is applicable, although the additional security is accepted after the maturity of the obligation,<sup>90</sup> unless a binding agreement to extend the time of payment of the obligation is made, as discussed infra § 174. Thus, the addition of a guaranty to a note will not release a maker thereof who is a surety.<sup>91</sup> A fortiori taking additional security to protect a debt other than that on which the surety is liable will not discharge him.<sup>92</sup>

Substitution of collateral. As a general rule substitution of collateral will not discharge the surety in the absence of injury in fact.<sup>93</sup> However, it has been held that substitution of security of a different kind discharges the surety, although the security substituted was as good as the security surrendered.<sup>94</sup> In any event, an unauthorized substitution of securities causing actual injury to the surety will result in his complete<sup>95</sup> or pro tanto<sup>96</sup> discharge.

§ 155. Taking of New Security or Execution of New Contract

While a new contract made by the creditor or obligee to take the place of a former one ordinarily will discharge the sureties on the old contract, a new bond does not necessarily take the place of the old one, but may be cumulative.

While a new contract made by the creditor or obligee to take the place of a former one will, in general, discharge sureties on the old contract,<sup>97</sup> a new contract between the creditor or obligee and the principal without notice to the surety, made after the principal's default and notice given to the surety thereof, not constituting a departure from the original contract, does not release the surety from liability.<sup>98</sup> Furthermore, as the rights and liabilities of a surety become fixed on a building contractor's default, the surety is not released from all liability when the owner relets the work to another contractor.<sup>99</sup> Hence, a new contract with a surety or its nominal representative for the completion of the work contracted for, made after the default of the principal and notice by the surety that it would complete the contract, will not discharge the surety from the liability for obligations incurred by the principal under the contract.<sup>1</sup>

A new bond does not necessarily take the place of the old one, but may be cumulative;<sup>2</sup> nor does the taking of bonds in judicial proceedings discharge sureties who were liable before such bonds were given.<sup>3</sup> However, if the intention is clearly otherwise, the new bond will be held to release the sureties on the first one.<sup>4</sup> If the relation terminates

§ 156. Knowledge of Existence of Relationship

As a general rule, in order that a surety, as such, may be discharged by acts of the creditor or obligee, the latter must have knowledge of the existence of the relation.

As a general rule, in order that a surety, as such may be discharged by acts of the creditor or obligee, the latter must have knowledge of the existence of the relation,<sup>8</sup> or it must appear from the face of the contract;<sup>9</sup> but, if the creditor or obligee has knowledge, it is not necessary that the relation be shown on the face of the instrument.<sup>10</sup> Although the creditor or obligee did not possess such knowledge originally, or if the relation arose from transactions occurring after the contract was entered into, he must respect the rights of the surety when informed that the relation exists, as discussed supra § 32.

§ 157. Prejudice to Surety

As a general rule, in order for a gratuitous surety to be discharged, it is not necessary that he show prejudice in fact; if technically his rights have been violated, he will be discharged whether he has in fact been harmed or benefited.

As a general rule, in order for a surety to be discharged, it is not necessary that he show prejudice in fact; if technically his rights have been violated, he will be discharged whether he has in fact been harmed or benefited.<sup>11</sup> However, in some jurisdictions the rule is that the release of a surety without payment or performance can only result from some act or omission by the creditor which proves or may prove injurious to the surety,<sup>12</sup> and, under the statutes existing in a few jurisdictions, a surety is discharged in most cases, only in so far as he has been prejudiced.<sup>13</sup>

Compensated surety. As a general rule, a compensated surety must be prejudiced by the act of the creditor or obligee before it will be discharged thereby.<sup>14</sup>

§ 158. Consent of Surety

A surety is not discharged by any act of the creditor or obligee to which he consents.

tion at a time subsequent thereto,<sup>17</sup> or it may be given in advance, as at the time the contract of suretyship is entered into.<sup>18</sup> If assent is conditional, the conditions must be performed in order that the surety's liability may continue.<sup>19</sup> Where there are two or more sureties, assent by fewer than all does not prevent the discharge of the others.<sup>20</sup>

Party necessary to give consent. If the surety is living, the consent must be given by him<sup>21</sup> or his agent;<sup>22</sup> if he is dead, by his personal representatives.<sup>23</sup>

Consent by a surety mentally incapable will operate the same as if no consent had been given.<sup>24</sup>

§ 159. — Implied Consent

Consent may be implied from the conduct of the surety.

Consent may be implied from the conduct of the surety,<sup>25</sup> such as advice or a request to perform the acts relied on as a discharge,<sup>26</sup> or from a course of business or usage known to the surety.<sup>27</sup> Where consent is to be implied, the facts from which it is to be implied must very clearly warrant the implication.<sup>28</sup> Mere knowledge of acts done by the creditor or obligee subsequent to the making of the contract of suretyship without objection on the part of the surety is not consent by the latter,<sup>29</sup> for, as a general rule, some affirmative action is necessary.<sup>30</sup>

§ 160. Waiver by, or Estoppel of, Surety

- a. In general
- b. New promise
- c. Taking indemnity or security from principal

a. In General

A surety may waive his defenses, or by his acts and conduct be estopped to assert them.

A surety may waive his defenses,<sup>31</sup> or by his acts and conduct be estopped to assert them.<sup>32</sup> So, knowledge at the time of entering into the contract of suretyship of acts done prior thereto without notice of dissent will estop the surety from claiming the advantage thereof.<sup>33</sup> Ordinarily, whatever will estop the principal from asserting a defense will also estop the surety as to that defense.<sup>34</sup> Waiver, unlike estoppel, is always a question of intention,<sup>35</sup> to be proved either by express declarations or by acts or omissions, from which it may be inferred.<sup>36</sup>

36. Colo.—Southern Surety Co. v. Chris Irving Plumbing, etc., Co., 184 P. 356, 67 Colo. 311.

It is essential that the surety have knowledge of the facts which would justify his considering himself discharged or not bound,<sup>37</sup> although it is not necessary that he be aware of their legal effect.<sup>38</sup> If his ignorance results from his own negligence he will be conclusively presumed to have knowledge.<sup>39</sup> If, with knowledge of such facts, he does any affirmative act which contemplates the continued existence of his status as a surety, he thereby waives the right to claim that he is discharged.<sup>40</sup> An offer to make a payment in order to avoid litigation is not a waiver of the provisions of the suretyship contract,<sup>41</sup> and an offer to pay a note, by the surety's attorney, under the mistaken belief that the surety is liable, will not estop the surety from defending on the ground that he has been released.<sup>42</sup> A surety cannot waive his defense to the detriment of his own creditors,<sup>43</sup> and a waiver by the principal will not affect the surety.<sup>44</sup>

b. New Promise

If a surety makes a new promise to pay the debt or acknowledges its continued existence, he thereby waives any defense he may have by reason of any act of the creditor or obligee.

If a surety makes a new promise to pay the debt,<sup>45</sup> or acknowledges its continued existence,<sup>46</sup>

he thereby waives any defense he may have by reason of any act of the creditor or obligee. However, a new promise in ignorance of a release is not binding.<sup>47</sup> As a general rule a new consideration is not regarded as necessary,<sup>48</sup> although the contrary is held in a few jurisdictions,<sup>49</sup> at least where necessary in order to revive the principal obligation.<sup>50</sup> The payment of interest by a surety, after his release by operation of law, will not alone operate as a new promise,<sup>51</sup> and part payment with the money of the principal, although the surety does not state that he acts as agent of the principal,<sup>52</sup> or declarations that he may have to pay or expects to pay,<sup>53</sup> or negotiations looking to a settlement,<sup>54</sup> or the mailing of a letter which is never received,<sup>55</sup> will not operate to reinstate the obligation.

c. Taking Indemnity or Security from Principal

As to whether a surety waives a defense by taking indemnity from the principal after knowledge of the facts, the cases are not in accord.

On the question whether a surety waives a defense by taking indemnity from the principal after knowledge of the facts, the cases are not in entire accord, it having been held that this is not a waiver,<sup>56</sup> while other cases are to the contrary.<sup>57</sup>

Where contractor in execution of his contract with subcontractor charged a large amount to subcontractor for lumber paid for by contractor, and subcontractor ratified the full charge, if ratification was erroneous, subcontractor's surety could have it corrected but surety was not warranted in rescinding and repudiating liability under the contract of suretyship because of defaults of the contractor under the circumstances without having specifically complained.—Knutson v. cepted security which appears not to be of any value,<sup>60</sup> or if he accepted the security without the knowledge of the creditor and subsequently surrendered it to the principal.<sup>61</sup>

D. EXTENSION OF TIME OF PAYMENT OR PERFORMANCE

§ 161. In General

A surety's contract cannot be extended by imposing thereon a new and different date for performance by the principal to the prejudice or possible prejudice of the surety without his concurrence.

While a surety's contract cannot be extended by imposing thereon a new and different date for performance by the principal to the prejudice or possible prejudice of the surety without his concurrence,<sup>62</sup> a creditor may, with the consent of the surety, grant the principal debtor an extension of time of payment,<sup>63</sup> or he may, in the absence of such consent, make such an agreement with the principal debtor if he reserves all rights against the surety<sup>64</sup> so that the agreement does not operate as absolute and final on the liability of the surety, but, rather, operates as a qualified and conditional suspension of the remedies which the creditor expressly retains against the surety.<sup>65</sup>

§ 162. Operation and Effect

As a general rule, an extension to the principal of the time of payment or performance of the principal obligation by the creditor or obligee, without the consent of the surety, will discharge the surety.

are that the extension amounts to an alteration of the principal contract without his consent,<sup>67</sup> that it operates as a new loan to the principal,<sup>68</sup> and that it impairs the surety's right of subrogation<sup>69</sup> by preventing his payment of the debt and procedure against the principal for indemnity.<sup>70</sup>

Applications of rule. The rule that an extension of time discharges the surety has been applied to agreements for extension of the time of performance of a contract,<sup>71</sup> arbitrations extending the time for payment of the principal debt,<sup>72</sup> agreements not to sue to collect the debt<sup>73</sup> or for a continuance<sup>74</sup> or stay<sup>75</sup> of proceedings, including a stay of execution by agreement of the parties,<sup>76</sup> and various other extensions.<sup>77</sup> A mere stipulation for postponement of one of the ordinary proceedings in an action will not discharge the surety<sup>78</sup> on an undertaking given therein.<sup>79</sup> An extension of an independent contract obviously will not discharge the surety.<sup>80</sup> An agreement by the creditor with the principal not to sue the surety until after a certain time does not discharge the latter.<sup>81</sup>

by which the time of payment of the debt is extended, every other surety who does not consent to such extension is released from liability.<sup>82</sup> The release of a surety operates to relieve his cosurety from liability for that proportion of the debt which the surety released should have paid as between himself and the cosurety had he not been released.<sup>83</sup> The mere giving of time to one or two cosureties whose obligations are equal will not discharge the other.<sup>84</sup>

§ 163. — Sureties on Negotiable Instruments

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, the general rule as to the discharge of the surety by an extension of time to the principal is applicable to sureties on negotiable instruments.

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, the general rule as to the discharge of the surety by an extension of time to the principal is applicable to sureties on negotiable instruments.<sup>85</sup> Where the suretyship relation arises independently of the negotiable instrument, an extension will discharge the surety.<sup>86</sup>

Act to the effect that one who, by the terms of a negotiable instrument, is absolutely required to pay it is primarily liable, and that only persons secondarily liable are discharged by extension or renewal without their assent, a joint maker of a note is not discharged by extension of the time of payment, even though he is a mere surety as between himself and the other maker.<sup>87</sup> An indorser surety, however, is discharged as one secondarily liable.<sup>88</sup> There is authority to the effect that the surety will be discharged as to one not a holder in due course,<sup>89</sup> although other authority is to the contrary.<sup>90</sup>

§ 164. — Surety Having Security

A surety taking security from his principal against liability by reason of the suretyship may not be permitted to urge a discharge by reason of an extension of time by the creditor.

A surety by taking security from his principal against liability by reason of the suretyship in effect appropriates that portion of the property or effects of the principal to the payment of the debt and may not be permitted to urge a discharge by reason of an extension of time by the creditor.<sup>91</sup> If, however, security taken from the principal by a surety to indemnify him against loss proves to be worthless,<sup>92</sup> or is lost without the fault of the surety,<sup>93</sup> he will be discharged by an extension of the time of payment. This is true also if security taken by him is returned to the principal before the extension is granted, the creditor not being aware of the indemnity at the time the extension is granted.<sup>94</sup>

§ 165. — Surety on Collateral Security

It has been held that an unauthorized extension of a principal note will discharge the surety on an instrument given as collateral.

It has been held that an unauthorized extension of a principal note will discharge the surety on an instrument given as collateral,<sup>95</sup> while other authority is to the contrary.<sup>96</sup>

§ 166. — Principal Debtors in Relationship of Principal and Surety Inter Se

Where two persons are bound for the same debt, and there is an obligation on the part of one to exonerate the other, in the event of payment being enforced against such other, and this is known to the creditor, then the creditor cannot extend the time of payment to the party ultimately liable without discharging the other debtor, even though such debtor occupies the position of a principal debtor to the creditor.

§ 167. — After Judgment against Principal and Surety

Where the suretyship relation survives a judgment against principal and surety, an extension of time after such judgment will discharge the surety.

Where the suretyship relation is held to survive a judgment against principal and surety, an extension of time after such judgment will discharge the surety.<sup>3</sup> Where, however, the surety is regarded as having become a principal by virtue of such judgment, an extension of time thereafter will not discharge him.<sup>4</sup>

§ 168. — Extension by One of Several Creditors or Obligees

An extension of time, or a stay of execution, granted to the principal by one of two joint creditors, has been held to release the surety as to both.

An extension of the time of payment,<sup>5</sup> or a stay of execution,<sup>6</sup> granted to the principal by one of two joint creditors, has been held to release the surety as to both. It has also been held that where a contractor gives a bond to secure laborers and materialmen, as well as to secure the performance of his contract, an extension of time for completing the work will not affect the liability of the sureties on the bond, for labor and material furnished.<sup>7</sup>

§ 169. — Extension as to One of Joint Principals

A contract of extension entered into between the creditor and one of several joint makers of the principal contract operates to discharge the sureties in the absence of their assent.

A contract of extension entered into between the creditor and one of several joint makers of the principal contract operates to discharge the sureties if not assented to by them.<sup>8</sup>

§ 170. — Extension as to Part of Debt

An extension of time granted to the principal for a portion of his indebtedness will not discharge a surety as to the balance.

An extension of time granted to the principal for a portion of his indebtedness will not discharge a surety as to the balance.<sup>9</sup> If a surety is liable for different payments,<sup>10</sup> such as installments of rent,<sup>11</sup> an extension of time as to one or more will not affect the liability of the surety as to the others. The surety is, however, discharged as to the particular payment for which an extension was granted.<sup>12</sup> An agreement that the indebtedness may be paid in installments after maturity is an extension of time discharging the surety.<sup>13</sup>

§ 171. — Where Period of Maturity Not Fixed

Where no period of maturity is fixed, no extension of time can discharge the surety.

Where no period of maturity is fixed, no extension of time can discharge the surety.<sup>14</sup> Where the surety has become liable for all debts of the principal to become due, extensions granted to the principal will not discharge the surety if the debt as extended answers to the description of those intended to be secured.<sup>15</sup> Under a statute providing that a contractor's bond is to stand as security for specified claims and demands until the same are fully paid, sureties on such a bond are not discharged by an extension of time as to claims or demands of the character specified in the statute.<sup>16</sup> An extension for a period not in excess of that limited by statute for the bringing of suit on the original indebtedness will not discharge a compensated surety.<sup>17</sup>

§ 172. — Affirmative Relief

A surety who has been discharged by an extension of time to the principal need not wait until he is proceeded against, to take advantage of his defense, but is entitled to relief in equity.

A surety who has been discharged by an extension of time to the principal need not wait until he is proceeded against, to take advantage of his defense. He is entitled to relief in equity,<sup>20</sup> and can obtain an injunction restraining proceedings against him,<sup>21</sup> or against execution on a judgment obtained before he had notice of the extension of time.<sup>22</sup>

§ 173. Requisites and Sufficiency of Extension

In order to constitute an extension discharging the surety, it should appear that the extension was for a definite period, pursuant to an enforceable agreement between the principal and a creditor having knowledge of the suretyship relation, and that it was made without consent of the surety or with a reservation of rights with respect to him.

In order to constitute an extension discharging the surety, it should appear that the extension was for a definite period, pursuant to an enforceable agreement between the principal and a creditor having knowledge of the suretyship relation, and that it was made without consent of the surety or with a reservation of rights with respect to him.<sup>23</sup> The right of a surety to consider himself discharged by an extension of time to the principal is not affected by the fact that the principal did not know of the suretyship relation.<sup>24</sup> In order to discharge the surety by an extension it must appear that the contract did in fact provide for an extension.<sup>25</sup>

The contract must be one which precludes the creditor from,<sup>26</sup> or at least hinders him in,<sup>27</sup> enforcing the principal contract within the period during which he could otherwise have enforced it, and which precludes the surety from paying the debt.<sup>28</sup> If the principal confess judgment under an agreement with the creditor for a stay of execution, it has been held that the surety is not discharged if the creditor could not have obtained judgment, in the ordinary course, any sooner than the postponed time;<sup>29</sup> but if the extension is longer than the time which would be required to obtain judgment and execution in a suit not defended, the surety is discharged, although the principal might have obtained as great delay by defending the suit.<sup>30</sup> If the creditor agrees to receive pay-

§ 174. — Necessity of Binding Agreement

There must be a binding and enforceable contract extending the time of payment to the principal debtor in order to effect a release of the surety.

Mere delay,<sup>32</sup> indulgence,<sup>33</sup> or forbearance<sup>34</sup> to the principal will not discharge the surety. In order to effect his release there must be contract for extension, binding and enforceable<sup>35</sup> at law<sup>36</sup> or in equity.<sup>37</sup> A binding contract is not shown where the agreement for extension has been executed by only a portion of the parties between whom it purports to be made.<sup>38</sup>

Mutual assent. The rule applicable to contracts generally requiring mutual assent applies to contracts for an extension having the effect of discharging the surety.<sup>39</sup> A mere unaccepted offer is insufficient to constitute a contract for extension discharging the surety.<sup>40</sup> It has been said that the contract must be positive,<sup>41</sup> definite,<sup>42</sup> and complete.<sup>43</sup>

§ 175. — Necessity of Fixed or Definite Period of Extension

The extension of the principal debt must be for a fixed or definite period in order to discharge the surety.

The extension of the principal debt must be for a fixed or definite period in order to effect a discharge of the surety.<sup>44</sup> It is not sufficient that the creditor actually does wait a long time after an agreement for delay.<sup>45</sup> Any fixed period of extension, however short, is sufficient,<sup>46</sup> such as a few days,<sup>47</sup> a day,<sup>48</sup> or even a moment.<sup>49</sup> In accordance with the general rule it has been held that the surety is not discharged by an agreement to dismiss a suit without specification of any day up to which indulgence is to be given,<sup>50</sup> or by a stay or withdrawal of execution without a definite extension.<sup>51</sup>

An extension for a specified number of days is for a fixed or definite time so as to discharge the surety.<sup>52</sup> There is authority to the effect that a reasonable time is a definite time within the meaning of the rule,<sup>53</sup> while other authority is to the contrary.<sup>54</sup> An agreement to extend the time for payment until the debtor is able to pay has been held to release the surety.<sup>55</sup> An extension until demand has been held not to be for a definite period.<sup>56</sup> In accordance with the facts and circumstances of the particular case various agreements have been held to constitute<sup>57</sup> or not to constitute<sup>58</sup> an extension for a fixed or definite period.

§ 176. — Changing Form or Evidence of Indebtedness.

Merely changing the form or the evidence of indebtedness, or taking an additional evidence thereof, involves no extension and does not discharge the surety. Taking new evidence of indebtedness to mature at a later date is an extension discharging the surety.

Merely changing the form<sup>59</sup> or the evidence of indebtedness,<sup>60</sup> or taking an additional evidence thereof,<sup>61</sup> involves no extension and does not discharge the surety. If a note of the principal is not taken as payment of the original debt<sup>62</sup> or does not suspend the creditor's right of action<sup>63</sup> the surety is not discharged. Taking a new evidence of indebtedness to mature at a later date is an extension discharging the surety,<sup>64</sup> as where the creditor takes from the principal a note<sup>65</sup> or draft<sup>66</sup> for the debt payable at a future day. or judgment<sup>68</sup> is an extension.

Taking a check with the understanding that the drawer did not have any money in the bank, but would deposit some within two or three days, is not an extension;<sup>69</sup> nor is a surety discharged because the creditor takes a note of the principal for an indebtedness for which the surety is not liable<sup>70</sup> or if the original note is retained as collateral security for the new notes.<sup>71</sup> A note<sup>72</sup> or bill of exchange<sup>73</sup> of the principal, taken for the purpose of having the proceeds thereof, when obtained, applied on the original indebtedness, does not discharge the surety, although such action has been taken by the principal with the expectation that the creditor will refrain from pressing for immediate payment.<sup>74</sup>

§ 177. — Taking New Collateral

The creditor does not extend the time of payment so as to discharge the surety merely by taking new security maturing after the debt becomes due.

The creditor does not extend the time of payment so as to discharge the surety merely by taking new security maturing after the debt becomes due,<sup>75</sup> such as a mortgage,<sup>76</sup> a guaranty,<sup>77</sup> a warrant of attorney to confess judgment,<sup>78</sup> or an order on a third person;<sup>79</sup> nor is an extension effected by taking a bond<sup>80</sup> or note<sup>81</sup> of the principal as collateral security. The mere taking of the note of the principal does not of itself establish an agreement to give further time, since it is presumed to have been taken as collateral security;<sup>82</sup> it must be shown to have been substituted for the previous liability of the principal.<sup>83</sup> A renewal note, however, is presumed to be in extinguishment of the original note and not mere collateral.<sup>84</sup>

If the agreement between the principal and the creditor is that the latter will not proceed on the original debt if the subsequent note is paid,<sup>85</sup> or if the creditor realizes from the collateral security,<sup>86</sup> there is an extension discharging the surety. If the principal turns over property for the purpose of having it converted into money, and payment made from the proceeds, and the creditor consents to a sale thereof on credit, it will constitute such an extension as to discharge a surety.<sup>87</sup>

§ 178. — Payment of Interest

The mere fact of the payment or acceptance of interest in advance without an agreement to extend the time of payment will not discharge a surety.

ment will not discharge a surety. The payment of interest as it accrues after maturity of the debt, coupled with indulgence in fact, does not constitute a contract for extension discharging the surety.<sup>90</sup>

Past-due interest. A contract for extension will not be implied from payment of past-due interest at a rate greater than was due.<sup>91</sup>

§ 179. — Where Maturity of Principal Debt or Period of Surety's Obligation Indefinite

If no definite time of payment of the principal obligation is fixed, an agreement fixing a definite time of payment is not an extension discharging the surety.

If no definite time of payment of the principal obligation is fixed, an agreement fixing a definite time of payment is not an extension discharging the surety.<sup>92</sup> Where the surety guarantees an obligation for as long as it may exist, without specification of any definite period, extensions of time for payment will not discharge the surety.<sup>93</sup> If the surety has agreed to become responsible for all debts owing by the principal at a certain future time, any extensions granted to the principal which do not expire later than such time will not affect the liability of the surety.<sup>94</sup>

§ 180. — Parties to Extension

The contract extending the time of payment must be made between the creditor and the principal in order to discharge the surety.

The contract extending the time of payment must be made between the creditor and the principal in order to discharge the surety.<sup>95</sup> The extension agreement must be an agreement with the principal, or at least an agreement of which the principal has a legal right to avail himself.<sup>96</sup> The surety will not be discharged by a contract of extension between the principal and one purporting to represent the creditor, but lacking authority to do so,<sup>97</sup> such as an unauthorized agent<sup>98</sup> or an attorney.<sup>99</sup> However, if the creditor, on learning that someone assuming to act for him has granted an extension of time, does not insist on his objection thereto, a ratification thereof may be indicated.<sup>1</sup>

Executors and administrators. In some jurisdictions an administrator<sup>2</sup> or an executor<sup>3</sup> of a creditor has power to grant an extension of time to the principal which will discharge the surety; in others the rule is to the contrary.<sup>4</sup> It has been held that a principal becoming administrator of the estate of a surety may discharge such estate by giving his individual note, after maturity, for the amount of the principal bond.<sup>5</sup>

Partner executing without authority a firm obligation in place, and in extension, of his individual obligation does not thereby discharge the surety on the latter.<sup>6</sup>

Receiver. A contract of extension made by a receiver without authority so to contract will not discharge the surety.<sup>7</sup>

the time of payment is immaterial provided it is of a character which is binding and enforceable.<sup>8</sup> It need not be express,<sup>9</sup> but may be inferred from acts, declarations, facts, and circumstances.<sup>10</sup> Ordinarily a contract for extension discharging a surety may be oral.<sup>11</sup> Where the agreement for an extension, however, is of a character which is required by statute to be in writing, an oral contract will be insufficient.<sup>12</sup> If to admit the oral contract in evidence would have the effect of varying a written instrument<sup>13</sup> or a contract under seal,<sup>14</sup> evidence thereof will not be allowed at law, and the surety will not be discharged, although even in such case the surety may be discharged in equity.<sup>15</sup>

§ 182. — Consideration in General

An agreement for the extension of time must be supported by a sufficient consideration in order to effect the discharge of the surety.

An agreement for the extension of time must be supported by a sufficient consideration in order to effect the discharge of the surety.<sup>16</sup> Mutuality is essential.<sup>17</sup> An agreement for a stay of execution, like any other extension agreement, ordinarily must be supported by a sufficient consideration in order to effect the discharge of a surety.<sup>18</sup> It has been held that, where such an agreement has been actually performed, the surety is discharged irrespective of consideration in its inception.<sup>19</sup> A judgment providing for stay of execution and entered on the consent of parties other than the surety discharges the latter entirely aside from the question of consideration.<sup>20</sup>

Sufficiency in general. The payment of,<sup>21</sup> or promise to pay,<sup>22</sup> as by a note,<sup>23</sup> money additional to that due on the principal obligation is sufficient consideration to support an extension agreement discharging a surety. An actual money consideration is not, however, essential,<sup>24</sup> since the consideration may consist of mutual promises.<sup>25</sup>

Obtaining additional security. If the principal, as consideration for an extension of time, gives his creditor additional security, it is sufficient,<sup>26</sup> although the security may be inadequate.<sup>27</sup> A transfer of property by the principal,<sup>28</sup> or an or-

Payments on account of other debts. The payment of,<sup>35</sup> or promise to pay,<sup>36</sup> another matured debt owing by the principal to the creditor is not a consideration sufficient to support an extension agreement discharging the surety. The promise to pay, before maturity, another debt of the principal is a sufficient consideration.<sup>37</sup> Application of a portion of the money paid on the principal debt to a different obligation has been held sufficient consideration to support an extension agreement.<sup>38</sup>

§ 183. — Partial Payment of Principal

Payment or the promise to pay at or after maturity part of the amount due ordinarily is not a sufficient consideration for an extension of the time of payment of the balance.

Although there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>47</sup> it has been held that payment<sup>48</sup> or the promise to pay<sup>49</sup> at or after maturity part of the amount due is not a sufficient consideration for an extension of the time of payment of the balance. It has also been held that part payment, before maturity, of the debt for which the surety is liable is a sufficient consideration.<sup>50</sup>

a. In General

A promise to pay, or the actual payment of, interest already accrued and due is not a sufficient consideration to support an extension of time discharging a surety.

A promise to pay,<sup>51</sup> as by giving a note,<sup>52</sup> or the actual payment of,<sup>53</sup> interest already accrued and due is not a sufficient consideration to support an extension of time discharging a surety. The payment of interest in advance,<sup>54</sup> as by giving a note therefor,<sup>55</sup> is a sufficient consideration.

ment of interest as it matures during the period of extension does not constitute a consideration sufficient to support a contract for extension discharging the surety,<sup>56</sup> but the promise to pay interest which will accrue during such period ordinarily is regarded as constituting a sufficient consideration,<sup>57</sup> although there is also authority to the contrary.<sup>58</sup> It has been held that an agreement for extension raises an implied promise to pay interest constituting a consideration which will support such agreement.<sup>59</sup>

b. Rate

A promise to pay, or payment of, interest at a rate higher than that demanded by the original contract has been held a consideration sufficient to support an extension discharging the surety.

It has been both affirmed<sup>60</sup> and denied<sup>61</sup> that payment of interest at a rate higher than that demanded by the original contract is a consideration sufficient to support an extension discharging the surety. A promise to pay interest at a higher rate ordinarily is regarded as a sufficient consideration.<sup>62</sup>

Same rate. There is a conflict of authority as to whether a promise to pay interest at the same rate is a sufficient consideration.<sup>63</sup> In some jurisdictions a promise to pay interest at the rate specified in the original contract,<sup>64</sup> or at the rate which the principal is bound by law to pay,<sup>65</sup> is regarded as not constituting any consideration for an extension of time. In other jurisdictions the rule is to the contrary.<sup>66</sup>

Reduced rate. A promise to pay interest at a reduced rate is not a sufficient consideration.<sup>67</sup>

Interest on interest. An agreement to pay interest on interest shows a consideration sufficient to support an extension discharging the surety.<sup>68</sup>

§ 185. — Fraudulent and Usurious or Other Illegal Contracts

Ordinarily an illegal contract of extension will not discharge the surety if executory; but a contract of extension, although illegal in its inception, may discharge the surety if already executed.

Ordinarily an illegal contract of extension will not discharge the surety if executory.<sup>69</sup> This rule has been applied, for example, to contracts attacked as constituting a preference under a bankruptcy act<sup>70</sup> or because of failure to observe statutory requirements relative to corporations.<sup>71</sup> A contract of extension, however, although illegal in its inception, may discharge the surety if already executed.<sup>72</sup>

Fraud. An executory agreement for an extension obtained by fraud practised on the creditor, being voidable, will not discharge the surety.<sup>73</sup> The rule is applied where the creditor has granted an extension of time because of a representation by the principal that the surety has consented thereto,<sup>74</sup> because he fraudulently has been induced to accept a worthless note,<sup>75</sup> or where the creditor gave time to the principal on condition that a new bond<sup>76</sup> or note<sup>77</sup> be executed, and the principal forged the signatures of the sureties to the new instrument. It has been held that, where the signature of a surety to a renewal note is obtained by a false representation of the principal to which the creditor is not a party, the extension is valid and the surety on the original note is released.<sup>78</sup> If the creditor, on learning of the fraud practiced on him by the principal, does not act promptly, the surety will be discharged unless it clearly appears that he has not been prejudiced.<sup>79</sup> Where the fraudulent contract has already been executed, the surety is discharged.<sup>80</sup>

Usury. Whether an extension granted on an executory agreement to pay usury will discharge the surety depends largely on the effect of usury on the contract, under the statutes of the different jurisdictions. If such agreement is made illegal, the agreement for an extension is not binding, and hence the surety is not discharged,<sup>81</sup> although the delay is actually given in pursuance of the agreement;<sup>82</sup> in other jurisdictions the surety is discharged.<sup>83</sup> Actual payment of usurious interest in advance of its due date and of the expiration of the period of extension discharges the surety, under the general rule relative to executed contracts.<sup>84</sup> Actual payment of usurious interest, however, after expiration of the period of extension, pursuant to a previous executory agreement to pay usury, does not discharge the surety.<sup>85</sup>

§ 186. — Performance of Conditions

If a creditor has annexed conditions to his agreement for an extension of time, the agreement is not binding if the conditions are not performed, and the surety is not discharged.

Not only must the agreement for an extension be complete, but, if the creditor has annexed conditions to his agreement for an extension of time, the agreement is not binding if the conditions are not performed, and the surety is not discharged.<sup>86</sup> It has been held that a contract for extension made conditional on the surety's consent does not discharge the latter.<sup>87</sup>

§ 187. Knowledge of Relationship

As a general rule, the creditor must have knowledge of the existence of the suretyship relation in order to discharge the surety on the ground that the time of payment has been extended without his consent.

As a general rule, the creditor must have knowledge of the existence of the suretyship relation in order to discharge the surety on the ground that the time of payment has been extended without his consent.<sup>88</sup>

§ 188. Prejudice to Surety

The general rule is that a surety is discharged by an unauthorized extension of time irrespective of whether or not he suffered prejudice in fact.

In the absence of statutes making actual prejudice essential to discharge the surety, the general rule is that a surety is discharged by an unauthorized extension of time irrespective of whether or not he suffered prejudice in fact,<sup>89</sup> as where the surety was not in fact prejudiced by the extension because the principal was insolvent<sup>90</sup> or a discharged bankrupt.<sup>91</sup> In other words, legal prejudice sufficient to discharge the surety is presumed from the alteration of the contract.<sup>92</sup>

§ 189. — Compensated Surety

Prejudice in fact is essential to the discharge of a compensated surety by an extension of time.

the rule of strictissimi juris being inapplicable to paid sureties with respect to the effect of an extension of time.<sup>94</sup> Where, however, actual prejudice is shown, a compensated surety will be discharged by an extension of time.<sup>95</sup> The rule denying discharge to a compensated surety in the absence of prejudice in fact has been applied to a surety compensated only in the sense that he was a large stockholder in the principal corporation.<sup>96</sup>

§ 190. Reservation of Rights

The rule that an extension of time without the consent of the surety discharges the surety does not apply where the creditor or obligee reserves his rights against the surety.

The rule that an extension of time without the consent of the surety discharges the surety does not apply where the creditor or obligee reserves his rights against the surety<sup>97</sup> or reserves the right to sue the principal at the surety's request.<sup>98</sup> Such a reservation cannot be implied,<sup>99</sup> but must be express,<sup>1</sup> clear,<sup>2</sup> and definite.<sup>3</sup> The creditor must not only retain the original instrument of indebtedness,<sup>4</sup> but must expressly reserve the right of immediate action.<sup>5</sup> A reservation to the principal of the right to pay off the debt before expiration of the period of extension will not prevent discharge of the surety.<sup>6</sup>

§ 191. Consent of Surety

- a. In general
- b. What constitutes

a. In General

A surety is not discharged by an extension of the time of payment or performance to which he consents.

A surety is not discharged by an extension of the time of payment or performance to which he consents,<sup>10</sup> as where he consents in advance,<sup>11</sup> for example, where the extension is permissible within the express or implied provisions of the contract ex-executed by the surety,<sup>12</sup> such as a bond<sup>13</sup> or note.<sup>14</sup> If assent is conditional, the condition must be performed in order that the surety's liability may continue.<sup>15</sup>

b. What Constitutes

An implied consent may be sufficient to preclude the surety from asserting the defense of extension of time.

An implied consent may be sufficient to preclude the surety from asserting the defense of extension of time,<sup>17</sup> as where the surety's consent is inferred from the fact that he was instrumental in procuring the extension.<sup>18</sup> Consent is not shown, however, by the surety's mere inquiry as to whether an extension may be granted,<sup>19</sup> or, in the absence of agency, by his declaration that any arrangement made by the principal will be satisfactory,<sup>20</sup> or by the existence of a clause in the principal contract imposing a penalty for delay.<sup>21</sup> Consent to an extension for a specified time,<sup>22</sup> or at a specified time,<sup>23</sup> or in a specified way<sup>24</sup> will not be construed as consent to a longer or different sort of extension. Consent in a note to extensions of time will be construed as limited to the period covered by the statute of limitations on the note.<sup>25</sup>

Surety's knowledge of extension. It is not essential that the surety should know of the extension in order to be discharged,<sup>26</sup> and his knowledge and passive failure to object do not show consent.<sup>27</sup>

Number of extensions. Consent to one extension will not be construed as consent to subsequent and additional extensions.<sup>28</sup> Where the language so in-

Termination of authority

Death of one of parties secondarily liable terminated principal maker's authority under note to execute extension agreement; hence subsequent extension made without consent of parties secondarily liable and proper representative of deceased operated for their release.—

Extension in nature of indulgence

Surety, executing contract providing that extension of time by note or otherwise, granted principal debtor by creditor in connection with debtor's failure to pay indebtedness, should not release surety, consented only to extension in nature of indulgence, not to extension agreement transferring to trustees creditor's right to grant extensions, and such agreement so impaired surety's right of subrogation as to discharge him.—*Pure Oil Co. v. ## § 192. Waiver, Ratification, and Estoppel

A surety may waive the right to a discharge by an extension of time, or lose it through ratification or estoppel.

Since the right to a discharge by extension of time is a personal privilege of the surety,<sup>30</sup> he may waive such right<sup>31</sup> or lose it through ratification<sup>32</sup> or estoppel.<sup>33</sup> If the surety is ignorant of the granting of the extension, no waiver thereof can be shown.<sup>34</sup> Waiver cannot be shown by a letter of the surety never received by the addressee.<sup>35</sup>

Waiver in advance. The waiver may be in advance,<sup>36</sup> as by an express provision in the contract to that effect.<sup>37</sup>

Subsequent waiver. Waiver may be shown by acts subsequent to the extension,<sup>38</sup> such as the surety's subsequent promise to pay the debt or his acknowledgment of its continued existence,<sup>39</sup> by his giving the creditor written notice to sue,<sup>40</sup> or by his acceptance of security from the principal after the extension.<sup>41</sup> An agreement by a surety for a further extension of time of payment after a previous extension to the principal is a waiver of the latter defense.<sup>42</sup> Also the acceptance of a premium by a compensated surety after an extension of which it had knowledge is a waiver of the discharge.<sup>43</sup>

§ 194. — Inducing Surety to Refrain from Protecting Himself

A surety is discharged by any act of the creditor inducing him to refrain from protecting himself.

A surety is discharged by any act of the creditor inducing him to forego taking steps to protect himself,<sup>44</sup> such as a false representation<sup>45</sup> or concealment<sup>46</sup> of material facts. In order to effect the surety's discharge by a representation, it must appear that the surety was deceived<sup>47</sup> by a representation on which he had a right to rely,<sup>48</sup> or by concealment of facts the creditor was obligated to reveal,<sup>49</sup> and that in consequence of such representation or concealment the surety did in fact alter his line of conduct to his injury.<sup>50</sup> A pro tanto injury will result in a pro tanto discharge.<sup>51</sup>

Particular representations. Subject to the foregoing rules, ordinarily it is held that the surety is discharged by the creditor's statement that the debt has been paid or settled,<sup>52</sup> or that the creditor will look to and enforce the obligation only against the principal<sup>53</sup> or other parties liable,<sup>54</sup> and that the surety will not be called on for payment,<sup>55</sup> where in reliance thereon the surety refrains from securing himself to his injury. However, in the absence of proof of resultant injury,<sup>56</sup> a surety is not discharged by the creditor's mere statement that the principal is good for the amount of the debt,<sup>57</sup> that the creditor will not look to the surety,<sup>58</sup> that security held by the creditor will be sufficient,<sup>59</sup> that he does not want the surety any longer,<sup>60</sup> that he does not consider him bound,<sup>61</sup> or that he need not trouble himself.<sup>62</sup>

§ 195. — Inducing Surety to Relinquish Security

A surety is discharged by any act of the creditor inducing him to relinquish security.

If the surety, relying on notice from the creditor that the debt has been paid, releases security given to him,<sup>63</sup> or if he is induced to give up such security by any arrangement between the principal and the creditor,<sup>64</sup> or by direction of the creditor,<sup>65</sup> he will be discharged to the extent of the value of the security released. The surety is not discharged, however, by releasing security if he relies on statements made by one without authority to bind the creditor<sup>66</sup> or if the security is released through the fraud of the principal in which the creditor did not participate.<sup>67</sup> A surety is not discharged by the representations of the creditor by which the surety is induced to apply funds given to him by the debtor to apply to the payment of the secured debt to the

§ 196. Act of Principal

The surety is not discharged because he relied on information from the principal, and was thereby induced to refrain from protecting himself, unless the creditor participated therein.

F. RELINQUISHMENT, LOSS, OR MISAPPLICATION OF FUNDS OR SECURITIES

§ 197. In General

An obligee, who has securities or funds in his possession or control applicable to the payment of the secured debt, is under the obligation to the surety to use ordinary care and prudence to preserve them for the surety's benefit, and the surety is discharged from liability if the creditor relinquishes or loses them, or consents to a material alteration of the security to the prejudice of the surety, or by any act deprives the surety of the right of subrogation.

A creditor or obligee, who has securities, property, or funds in his possession or control applicable to the payment of the secured debt, is under obligation to the surety to use ordinary care and prudence to preserve such securities, property, or funds for the surety's benefit,<sup>73</sup> and the surety is discharged from further liability either entirely or pro tanto, as discussed infra § 206, if the creditor, in dereliction of his duty, relinquishes<sup>74</sup> or, according to the judicial decisions on the question, loses<sup>75</sup> them by his voluntary acts<sup>76</sup> or through his negligence,<sup>77</sup> or if he consents to a material alteration of the security to the prejudice of the surety,<sup>78</sup> or by any act deprives the surety of the right of subrogation.<sup>79</sup> Relinquishment operates as a discharge of the surety without regard to the existence of collusion<sup>80</sup> or the time when the creditor received the security held by him,<sup>81</sup> or whether the surety has knowledge thereof,<sup>82</sup> or whether the principal lacked capacity to enter into the contract.<sup>83</sup> However, relinquishment does not so operate where the creditor has no knowledge, and is not chargeable with knowledge, of the existence of the suretyship<sup>84</sup> or where the act relied on as constituting the relinquishment was not the proximate cause of the loss.<sup>85</sup>

discharged if the loss of security results from the fault of someone other than the creditor.<sup>86</sup> If relinquishment of security is by a part only of those entitled to enforce the liability of a surety, the rights of the others to hold the surety are not affected.<sup>87</sup> It has been held that sureties are not discharged if relinquishment or loss of security is procured by means of fraud of the principal.<sup>88</sup> A surety is not discharged by relinquishment of security by a cosurety<sup>89</sup> or a loss caused by the surety himself,<sup>90</sup> or through his negligence,<sup>91</sup> or with his consent,<sup>92</sup> or by a third person, such as by one holding security in trust;<sup>93</sup> nor can the right of the creditor to proceed against a surety be prejudiced by the misappropriation of property of the principal by a cosurety.<sup>94</sup> It has been held that a surety is not discharged by a loss of security resulting from an order of court.<sup>95</sup>

Character of funds or securities. The rule applies to any funds<sup>96</sup> or property<sup>97</sup> belonging to the principal which may be rightfully retained, or to claims of the principal against third persons,<sup>98</sup> or to a mortgage or deed of trust,<sup>99</sup> or other lien on property of the principal,<sup>1</sup> such as a judgment or execution lien, as discussed infra § 201. The creditor must have the right to apply the money to the secured debt before he can be charged with releasing the surety by not applying such funds;<sup>2</sup> and the lien must be in existence, or the surety must request the creditor to take steps to establish it, in order to give the surety a right to its protection.<sup>3</sup> A surety is not discharged by surrender of security which is not enforceable<sup>4</sup> or by the release of a collateral mere personal obligation of the principal debtor<sup>5</sup> or of some third person.<sup>6</sup>

Where there are several sets of sureties on several debts, and securities are delivered to a creditor applicable to the several debts, the fact that the creditor did not collect some of the securities is no defense to an action at law against the sureties on a particular debt.<sup>7</sup>

Independent transactions. A surety is not discharged by a relinquishment of security given for some independent matter<sup>8</sup> or if money is paid the principal as compensation for services arising from some independent transaction.<sup>9</sup>

§ 198. Misapplication of Funds or Securities

The creditor must account to the surety for funds or property received as security for the debt for which the surety is bound, and if he fraudulently encumbers or conceals, or misapplies, such funds or property the surety is discharged to the extent of the value of the security encumbered, concealed, or misapplied.

The creditor, having received funds or property as security for the debt, must account for it to the surety in an action against him,<sup>10</sup> it being his duty to the surety to appropriate such funds or property<sup>11</sup> and any profits therefrom<sup>12</sup> to the debt for which the security was given. If the creditor fraudulently encumbers or conceals it,<sup>13</sup> or applies it to a purpose other than the satisfaction of that debt,<sup>14</sup> even though the debt secured is not yet due,<sup>15</sup> or applies funds already appropriated to the purposes of the contract to other purposes,<sup>16</sup> the surety is discharged to the extent of the value of the security encumbered, concealed or misapplied.

On the other hand, the fact that proceeds of the property of the principal were distributed improperly by an erroneous judgment of a court does not discharge the surety,<sup>17</sup> and, if the creditor applies security given by one cosurety for both his personal indebtedness and liability as surety to payment of his personal indebtedness, the liability of the other cosurety is not affected.<sup>18</sup> Consent by a creditor to an application of funds to which he is entitled under his contract to the payment of other claims, thereby reducing by so much the amount of the debt on which the surety is secondarily liable, is not a misapplication of funds discharging the surety.<sup>19</sup>

Agreement to apply funds. Where the creditor has bound himself by contract to apply certain funds within his control to the payment of the debt, his breach of such contract will discharge the surety from further liability.<sup>20</sup>

§ 199. Disposition of Security for Less than Value

If the property of the principal is sold irregularly or negligently by the creditors, so that it brings less than its value, the surety is discharged pro tanto; but the mere fact that property is sold for less than its full value, if the sale was made regularly and in good faith, will not release the surety.

If property of the principal is sold irregularly or negligently by the creditors, so that it brings less than its value, the surety is discharged pro tanto,<sup>21</sup> as where the creditor bid in the property at a nominal sum<sup>22</sup> or prevented others from bidding at the sale.<sup>23</sup> However, the mere fact that property is sold for less than its full value will not release a surety, if the sale was made regularly and in good faith,<sup>24</sup> and although sold at private sale, if the creditor has the right to sell at private sale,<sup>25</sup> and if the property was sold for its full market value the surety remains liable, although it might be worth more to him.<sup>26</sup> If the value of property sold at its market value has declined since the sale, the surety is not prejudiced and cannot complain.<sup>27</sup> So, where the sale is made to the surety, he cannot complain that the property was sold for less than its value.<sup>28</sup>

§ 200. Failure to Register or Record Instrument

A surety has been held to be discharged by the failure of the creditor to record the instrument evidencing the obligation in consequence of which the security is lost; but there are also decisions to the contrary.

A surety has been held to be discharged by failure of the creditor to record the instrument evidencing the obligation, such as a mortgage, in consequence of which the security is lost;<sup>29</sup> but it has also been held that the surety is not discharged by failure of the creditor to record the instrument evidencing the obligation,<sup>30</sup> especially if the surety did not request the creditor to record the instrument.<sup>31</sup> It has been held that a surety is discharged by omission of the creditor to file a purchase-money note whereby the benefit of the security is lost to the surety.<sup>32</sup> The surety is not discharged, however, where the security is not entitled to be recorded,<sup>33</sup> or where the creditor's rights to the security are not affected by the failure to record,<sup>34</sup> or the surety was not injured by such failure.<sup>35</sup> If the creditor has agreed to record a mortgage, he must do so within a reasonable time.<sup>36</sup>

§ 201. Loss or Release of Lien of Judgment or Execution

Relinquishment or loss of judgment and execution liens, except by operation of law, operates to prevent recovery against the surety.

The rule that relinquishment or loss of funds or securities by the creditor prevents a recovery against the surety, as discussed supra § 197, applies to judgment<sup>37</sup> and execution<sup>38</sup> liens. If a judgment, however, is lost by operation of law, the surety is not discharged,<sup>39</sup> as where an action is brought on a judgment, and a new judgment obtained, the lien of the first judgment being lost by the rendition of the second.<sup>40</sup>

Release of execution. If the creditor, having levied an execution on the property of the principal, afterward releases the levy, as a general rule he thereby deprives himself of recourse against the surety.<sup>41</sup> This is not so, however, if the release is procured by the principal without the consent or concurrence of the creditor,<sup>42</sup> or where a judgment is a lien on real property, whether or not levied on,<sup>43</sup> or where the creditor releases one levy to take out another, benefiting the surety thereby,<sup>44</sup> or where an execution is taken out against both principal and surety and a levy first made on land of the principal is dismissed and levy then made on land of the surety,<sup>45</sup> or where proceedings under a defective levy are discontinued,<sup>46</sup> or where the lien is lost by operation of law<sup>47</sup> or by virtue of a forthcoming or delivery bond, the forfeiture of which is not given the operation and effect of a judgment.<sup>48</sup> The release of a levy of the property of a cosurety releases the other cosureties to the extent of the proportion of the debt equitably due from the cosurety on whose property the levy was made and released.<sup>49</sup> The release of the cosurety's property would not have that effect, however, where both cosureties are, with respect to each other and the creditor, also joint principals,<sup>50</sup> or where the signature of the cosurety whose property was released was forged.<sup>51</sup>

§ 202. Discontinuance of Proceedings

A surety is not discharged because the creditor discontinues proceedings which have been begun, or by the return, at the request of the creditor, of an execution against property of the principal before a levy, or by the withdrawal of an execution which is void.

A surety is not discharged because the creditor discontinues proceedings which have been begun,<sup>52</sup> or by the return, at the request of the creditor, of an execution against property of the principal before a levy,<sup>53</sup> or by the withdrawal of an execution which is void.<sup>54</sup> So it has been held that the surety is not discharged by the release of an attachment against the property of the principal<sup>55</sup> unless the suit and attachment were at the request of the surety, in which event it has been considered that the surety will be discharged.<sup>56</sup> An abandonment of an attachment of property in a suit against one surety is no bar to the maintenance of a suit against another.<sup>57</sup>

§ 203. Failure to Obtain or Preserve Security

The creditor is under no obligation to exercise a greater degree of care in preserving security than a prudent man would use under the circumstances, and ordinarily does not owe any duty to the surety to obtain security or to employ active vigilance to realize on his security or to preserve it.

The creditor is under no obligation to exercise a greater degree of care in preserving security than a prudent man would use under the circumstances.<sup>58</sup> He does not owe any duty to the surety to obtain security<sup>59</sup> or to secure additional security.<sup>60</sup> He may waive security if it is offered,<sup>61</sup> and may take security for other claims for which the surety is not liable.<sup>62</sup> Ordinarily it is not necessary for the creditor to employ active vigilance to realize on his security.<sup>63</sup> He is not bound to revive judgment<sup>64</sup> or to prevent the principal from removing property not in the possession of the creditor,<sup>65</sup> it being the duty of the surety and not that of the creditor to invoke the law in such cases.<sup>66</sup>

Also the creditor is not under any duty to take active steps to preserve security,<sup>67</sup> at least where he is not in possession of the property constituting the security,<sup>68</sup> as to insure,<sup>69</sup> pay taxes,<sup>70</sup> or make repairs,<sup>71</sup> unless the agreement expressly provides that the creditor shall keep them up.<sup>72</sup> The creditor is under no duty to administer on the estate of a deceased principal in order to protect the surety if the latter has an equal opportunity of doing so.<sup>73</sup> Likewise the owner of a building in progress of erection is not under any obligation to see that the contractor applies the payments made to him, in discharge of claims for material and labor;<sup>74</sup> and a surety is not discharged although, by delay of the creditor, property in the possession of the latter has depreciated in value<sup>75</sup> or has been injured by fire.<sup>76</sup> The creditor is not proscribed from buying property from the principal merely because it deprives him of the right to attach it.<sup>77</sup>

Act affecting validity. Where security taken by a creditor requires some act by him to make it valid, it has been held that he impliedly agrees to perform such act,<sup>78</sup> and if he neglects or fails to do so, and the security is thereby lost or impaired, the surety may be discharged.<sup>79</sup>

§ 204. Necessity of Injury to Surety

Relinquishment of security by the creditor has been held not to operate as a discharge of a surety who is not injured by the transaction; the burden is on the creditor to show that the surety has not been injured.

It has been held that the rule that relinquishment of the security by the creditor operates as a discharge of the surety does not apply to a surety who is not injured by the transaction.<sup>80</sup> The burden, however, is on the creditor to show that the surety has not been injured.<sup>81</sup> A surety is not discharged by a release of security in which he has no interest,<sup>82</sup> or to which the principal does not have any title,<sup>83</sup> or of which the creditor has no possession or control,<sup>84</sup> or no right to retain,<sup>85</sup> or which he did not accept.<sup>86</sup> The surety is not discharged by the release of security where prior, valid liens would exhaust it entirely,<sup>87</sup> or when the surety has obtained otherwise all that his right of subrogation could possibly secure to him,<sup>88</sup> or if the creditor took the security under a binding agreement with the principal to return it,<sup>89</sup> unless such agreement was made subject to the surety's right to a precedent payment of the debt.<sup>90</sup>

§ 205. Consent or Estoppel of Surety

The rule that the relinquishment or misapplication of security by the creditor discharges the surety does not apply to one who has consented thereto, or participated therein, or who, with knowledge of the relinquishment or misapplication, acquiesces therein, or who became a surety after the release, knowing that it had been made.

The rule that the relinquishment or misapplication of security by the creditor or obligee discharges the surety applies where the relinquishment or misapplication takes place without the consent of the surety,<sup>91</sup> and does not apply to one who has consented thereto,<sup>92</sup> or participated therein,<sup>93</sup> or who, with knowledge of the relinquishment or misapplication, acquiesces therein,<sup>94</sup> or who became surety after the release, knowing that it had been made.<sup>95</sup> A surety is not discharged by failure of the creditor to sell the collateral in default of the debtor to pay in the absence of request of the surety that the sale be had,<sup>96</sup> or where the security has been relinquished by mistake to the knowledge of the surety and he delays for an unreasonable time in protecting himself.<sup>97</sup>

§ 206. Extent of Discharge

While a relinquishment, loss, impairment, or misapplication of security by the creditor may under some circumstances have the effect of discharging the surety altogether, ordinarily it discharges him pro tanto.

Note authorizing release of collateral

Where note provided that payee was not obliged to foreclose on collateral but could release it and could file suit without first foreclosing, sureties were not discharged from liability because payee failed to avail itself of security.—Ewing v. #### Substitution of building and loan shares

(1) It has been held that building and loan association's cancellation, without consent of surety on mortgagor's bond, of mortgagor's shares in particular series held as collateral security for debt and substitution of new shares releases the surety.—*Jacob Sall Building & Loan Ass'n v. (2) Fact that principal obligation provided that association might at any time appropriate on account of debt secured, withdrawal or cancellation value of shares held as collateral security does not alter result.—Jacob Sall Building & Loan Ass'n v. Heller, supra.

(3) In a somewhat similar case, where shares in building and loan association were pledged as collateral security for debt and, on default by debtor, association agreed to cancel shares originally held, to apply withdrawal value to reduction of loan and payment of arrearages, and to accept smaller number of shares in later series as collateral for balance due, and this was done without consent of surety, it was held that surety was discharged.—Double Dollar Building & Loan Ass'n v. Kushin, 159 A. 39, 306 Pa. 121.

§ 207. Affirmative Relief

Relinquishment, loss, or misapplication of funds or securities by the creditor may entitle the surety to affirmative relief, such as the return of any part of the security which the surety himself originally furnished, or, in a proper case, to an injunction against the creditor taking steps to enforce his claim against him.

Relinquishment, loss, or misapplication of funds or securities by the creditor may entitle the surety to affirmative relief.<sup>6</sup> Thus relinquishment, when proved, entitles the surety to the return of any part of the security which he himself originally furnished,<sup>7</sup> or to the return of any money paid by him on the debt before he was aware of any relinquishment or loss of security by the creditor,<sup>8</sup> or, in a proper case, to an injunction against the creditor taking steps to enforce his claim against him.<sup>9</sup> Where a surety, for the price of land purchased by another, has an equity to be reimbursed by a sale of the land for any sum which he has paid or is liable to pay, he may file his bill in equity to prevent a conveyance to the purchaser by the vendor who has retained the title as security for the purchase money.<sup>10</sup>

G. NEGLECT TO ACT OR PROCEED AGAINST PRINCIPAL

§ 208. In General

Except where required by contract or statute, the creditor owes the surety no duty of active diligence in proceeding against the principal, and mere want of diligence or forbearance will not affect the right of the creditor to pursue the surety.

Except in so far as the creditor or obligee may be required in equity to proceed first against the principal, as discussed infra § 287, or as the contrary may be required by provisions of the governing statute, as discussed infra § 209, or in the suretyship contract, as discussed infra § 210, the creditor owes the surety no duty of active diligence in proceeding against the principal,<sup>11</sup> and mere want of diligence<sup>12</sup> or forbearance<sup>13</sup> will not affect the right of the creditor to pursue the surety, since the latter, at any time after default of the principal, is entitled to pay the debt and reimburse himself by enforcing it against the principal.<sup>14</sup> The Failure to present note for payment Surety's liability on note being primary, payee's failure to present

note at bank at date of maturity did not discharge debt of surety.—Dry v. Reynolds, 172 S.E. 351, 205 N.C. 571.

Failure to press one debtor

Payee's forbearance, without consideration therefor, to press one of makers for payment of note, while insisting on payments from other makers, did not release surety on ground that maker was released.—Arnold v. Darby, 176 S.E. 914, 49 Ga. App. 629.

Where surety questions absence of principal

Omission of principal from action prior to judgment does not operate to discharge the surety where, during the pendency of the action and antecedent to the judgment, the surety raises the question of the effect of the absence of his principal in the action and the court has power fully to provide for the equities of the parties by bringing in the absent principal.—Albany Exchange Sav. Bank v. Winne, 6 N.Y.S.2d 699, 168 Misc. 853.

14. Tex.—Stetson v. First Nat. Bank, Civ.App., 44 S.W.2d 792, error refused.

Va.—Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Lackland, 8 S.E.2d 310, 175 Va. 178.

Right of recourse to principal in general see infra § 300.

The surety must himself use diligence, and take such effectual means as will enable him to call on the creditor to sue or to give him, the surety, the means of suing.—Mayers v. Krawshaar, 170 A. 752, 166 Md. 169—Freaner v. Yingling, 37 Md. 491.

consequences of the delay,<sup>15</sup> such as the subsequent insolvency of the principal,<sup>16</sup> or the fact that remedies against the principal may be lost by lapse of time,<sup>17</sup> are immaterial. There is added reason for denying relief to a surety if he contributes to the delay,<sup>18</sup> or if he consents, or is party to it, in any way.<sup>19</sup> Forbearance or indulgence given on a new and distinct consideration, or under such a binding obligation as precludes the creditor from pursuing his remedies on the debt may, however, discharge the surety.<sup>20</sup> So, delay under circumstances raising an estoppel to assert the claim may discharge the surety.<sup>21</sup>

§ 209. Statutory Provisions

Where a statute so provides, the creditor may be required to pursue the principal first; but a general provision of law, or of a by-law, that a defaulting officer must be proceeded against will not release his sureties, although such provision is ignored.

Where a statute so provides, the creditor or oblige may be required to pursue the principal first;<sup>22</sup> but a general provision of law, or of a by-law, that a defaulting officer must be proceeded against will not release his sureties, although such provision is ignored.<sup>23</sup>

§ 210. Contractual Provisions

Where the contract of suretyship so provides, the creditor may be required to pursue the principal first, but where time limitations in the suretyship contract on payment or bringing of suit are construed for the benefit of the creditor his failure to comply therewith does not discharge the surety.

Where the contract of suretyship so provides, the creditor may be required to pursue the principal first.<sup>24</sup> Thus, if the surety's contract stipulates that the creditor shall proceed against the principal without delay,<sup>25</sup> or before a certain fixed date,<sup>26</sup> or before the surety shall be called on to pay,<sup>27</sup> the surety is not liable unless such stipulation is complied with, even though the principal's default

Issuance of execution

Under statute discharging surety from liability under any judgment after the lapse of seven years without execution being issued for collection of judgment, when seven years have elapsed after the rendition of the judgment before any execution issued and when the same period elapses after return of one execution before another issues, surety is discharged from liability on the judgment.—Frick Co. v. Eversole, 116 S.W.2d 333, 273 Ky. 160—50 C.J. p 173 note 86 [c] (8).

In Texas

(1) Under a statute providing that the principal may be sued jointly with the surety, but that no judgment shall be rendered against the surety unless judgment shall have been previously, or at the same time shall be, rendered against the principal, except where plaintiff may discontinue his suit, for certain reasons there given, among them that the principal is actually or notoriously insolvent, and providing that the surety may be sued without the necessity of suing the principal, when, among other things, the principal is insolvent, a judgment against a surety without service on the principal, and without proof of his insolvency, cannot be sustained.—Welch v. Phelps, etc., Windmill Co., Civ.App., 37 S.W. 175.

(2) In an action on a note the payee's failure to seek judgment against the wife who signed with her husband as maker of note has been held not to bar judgment against the surety where the facts disclosed that there was no pleading, or proof that the house involved, for the materials in constructing which the note had been given, was the separate property of the wife, or that the house was constructed on land constituting her separate estate, and that there was no showing that the note had been given for necessities for the wife or her family or for the benefit of her separate estate, and facts also disclosed that the wife was actually and notoriously insolvent, and her whereabouts actually unknown to her husband and the surety; nor could the surety escape liability because of alleged negligence on the part of the payee in securing service of citation on the husband under record.—Turner v. Montgomery, Civ.App., 67 S.W.2d 637.

lies in repudiating the guaranteed contract.<sup>28</sup> However, where time limitations in the suretyship contract on payment<sup>29</sup> or the bringing of suit<sup>30</sup> are construed for the benefit of the creditor, his failure to comply therewith does not discharge the surety. A mere recital of the principal's obligation to pay is not sufficient to require the obligee to proceed against the principal before suing the surety.<sup>31</sup> An oral agreement cannot be shown to vary an absolute undertaking by the surety as shown in his written contract;<sup>32</sup> and an agreement by the creditor, without consideration, to proceed against the principal is void.<sup>33</sup>

§ 211. Failure to Present Claim against Decedent's or Insolvent's Estate

Failure of the creditor to present his claim against the estate of a deceased principal, within the statutory period allowed, does not discharge the surety, and the rule is the same with respect to the estate of an insolvent or bankrupt principal.

Failure of the creditor or obligee to present his claim against the estate of a deceased principal, within the statutory term for presentation of claims, does not discharge the surety,<sup>34</sup> especially if the surety admits that there are no funds in the hands of the principal's representative.<sup>35</sup> The rule is the same with respect to the estate of an insolvent or bankrupt principal; the creditor is not obliged to have his claim allowed, and to receive dividends,<sup>36</sup> although the assets might be sufficient to pay all claims in full.<sup>37</sup> However, it has been stated that a surety is entitled to expect at least ordinary diligence in the filing of claims by the creditor against the debtor's receiver,<sup>38</sup> and it has been held that, where the creditor has pleaded and been allowed the indebtedness of the surety's principal and has acquiesced in all matters pertaining to said indebtedness, the surety cannot be expected or required to take steps which the record showed unnecessary to protect himself from liability on a further claim which he had no reason to believe existed,<sup>39</sup> and that the creditor is precluded from making further claim against the surety in such case on principles of estoppel,<sup>40</sup> as well as the rule prohibiting splitting of causes of action.<sup>41</sup>

Statutory provisions. Some statutes provide that failure to present certain enumerated claims against the estate of a deceased principal shall operate to discharge the surety.<sup>42</sup> Where the claim is within the terms of the statute, the surety will be discharged if it is not duly presented.<sup>43</sup>

§ 212. Delay in Prosecution of Proceedings

Delay in the prosecution of proceedings against the principal will not discharge the surety even though it results in a loss which might not otherwise have occurred.

Delay in enforcing the claim against the principal will not release a surety, although it occurs after suit has been instituted,<sup>44</sup> especially where the surety unites with the principal in resisting recovery.<sup>45</sup> Thus, after judgment against the prin-

Service against principal not perfected

Judgment creditor was entitled to revive dormant judgment against surety on joint and several note, over objection that surety's liability had been increased, and that surety had consequently been discharged from liability, because service was never perfected on principal and no judgment was rendered against him.—Hicks v. principal, the creditor's delay or failure to exhaust his remedy against the principal will not relieve the surety from liability.<sup>46</sup> So delay in issuing execution after judgment has been obtained,<sup>47</sup> or a stay of execution,<sup>48</sup> does not discharge a surety; nor is delay after a levy on the principal's property a defense to his surety.<sup>49</sup> Delay in prosecuting the proceedings against the principal will not discharge the surety even though it results in a loss which might otherwise have been avoided,<sup>50</sup> as where the principal disposes of his property meanwhile,<sup>51</sup> or it is destroyed,<sup>52</sup> or is discharged from the lien of the judgment.<sup>53</sup>

A mere abandonment of a suit against the principal does not ipso facto discharge the surety.<sup>54</sup>

A valid and binding agreement to stay proceedings on a judgment against the principal entered into by the creditor and principal without the consent of the surety has been held, in equity, to discharge the surety from any further liability to the creditor.<sup>55</sup>

§ 213. Resort to Other Securities

Bank not appropriating deposit of principal

The facts that the principal in a note payable to a bank has funds on deposit in the bank after the maturity of the note exceeding the sum due thereon and the bank fails to appropriate them to the payment of the note do not discharge the surety.—Voss v. German American Bank, 83 Ill. 599, 25 Am.R. 415.

61. Ala.—State v. McElroy, 125 So. 903, 220 Ala. 452.

lay or failure to resort to the security is the result of the surety's own wrongful act.<sup>62</sup> It is equally clear that the surety is without proper ground for complaint if the security is resorted to first.<sup>63</sup> If the creditor has two or more securities, he is at liberty to resort to either,<sup>64</sup> but the surety will not be liable until other security has been exhausted if he has made that an express term in his contract.<sup>65</sup> Where there are two or more securities, one of them constitutes the primary fund, where the creditor and surety have entered into a binding agreement to that effect.<sup>66</sup> The creditor's right to proceed against the surety without resorting to the security is not affected in any way by an agreement between principal and surety to which he is not a party.<sup>67</sup>

Failure to proceed against cosurety. A surety is not discharged by the failure of the creditor to proceed against a cosurety<sup>68</sup> or by his dismissal of an action as to one of the sureties or his representatives.<sup>69</sup> So the fact that, on the death of one of the cosureties, the creditor may dismiss his suit against that surety without prejudice and proceed against the remaining defendants does not operate as a discharge in favor of the other sureties.<sup>70</sup>

§ 214. Notice by Surety to Creditor to Proceed against Principal

As a general rule, a surety cannot impose any burden on the creditor to proceed against the principal, nor will the surety be discharged by the creditor's failure to do so, but statutes in many jurisdictions afford the surety such right.

While it has been held that at common law the creditor's failure to comply with the surety's request to proceed against the principal operated to discharge the surety when, by the negligence of the creditor, the means of recovering the debt from the principal had been lost, or damage accrued to the surety,<sup>71</sup> as a general rule, in the absence of statute, a surety cannot, by notice, impose any burden on the creditor to proceed against the principal, nor will the surety be discharged by the creditor's failure to do so<sup>72</sup> or by his discontinuance of a suit

In Pennsylvania

(1) In an early case it was held that if the obligee was requested by the surety to proceed against the principal, in order to save the debt, and he neglected or refused to do so, the surety, both in law and in equity, was exonerated.—Eddowes v. Niell, 4 Dall. 133.

(2) However, in a somewhat later case it was stated that "sitting as a court of law, we cannot say, that a creditor neglecting to sue his principal debtor, on the requisition of his surety, thereby discharges his surety in general."—Dehuff v. Turbett, 3 Yeates 157, 162.

(3) It has also been stated that sureties cannot make the creditor use collateral in his hands or resort to the principal in the first instance.—American Mechanics Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Dunlap, 20 Lanc.L.Rev. 59.

(4) The statement referred to in the second paragraph has been criticized, the court saying that it was not a decision and must have been made in great haste or there must have been an inaccuracy in the report.—Cope v. Smith, 8 Serg. & R. 109, 116.

(5) In any event, it has been held in a number of cases that a surety will be discharged if the creditor refuses to sue the principal debtor on request, provided the debt might have been collected by suit at that time.—Second Saving Fund & Loan Ass'n v. Bailey, 170 A. 869, 313 Pa. 519—Conrad v. Foy, 68 Pa. 381—Shimer v. Jones, 47 Pa. 268—Wetzel v. Sponsler's Executors, 18 Pa. 460—Cope v. Smith, supra.

(6) Surety, in order to justify his release after notice to obligee to proceed against principal, must show that his request was reasonable and that he was deprived of what was not merely a speculative benefit.—Keystone Bank of Spangler, Pa., v. Booth, 6 A.2d 417, 334 Pa. 545—Gardner v. Ferree, 15 Serg. & R. 28, 16 Am.D. 513.

(7) Where evidence fails to show that creditor would have collected anything from principal, notice to proceed is ineffectual to discharge the surety.—Keystone Bank of Spangler, Pa., v. Booth, supra.

(8) The statute providing that the surety shall not be discharged by reason of notice to the creditor to collect the amount of the debt from the principal unless such notice is in writing and signed by the party giving the same cannot be otherwise construed than as limiting sub modo the exercise of a right theretofore existing, and does not of itself alone operate to relieve from liability.—Commonwealth v. National Surety Co., 164 A. 788, 310 Pa. 108, 89 A.L.R. 564.

72. N.M.—Kemp Lumber Co. v. Stanley, 160 P. 351, 22 N.M. 198. 50 C.J. p 176 note 32.

commenced against the principal after notice from the surety not to discharge the latter.<sup>73</sup> Statutes in many jurisdictions afford the surety the right by notice to require the creditor to bring suit against the principal,<sup>74</sup> and under such statutes the creditor's failure to comply with such notice duly given will discharge the surety<sup>75</sup> or extinguish the creditor's remedy against the surety.<sup>76</sup> In jurisdictions where such right was not afforded the surety at common law, such statutes have been regarded as in derogation of common law,<sup>77</sup> and as such it has been held that they must be strictly construed<sup>78</sup> and strictly complied with.<sup>79</sup> On the other hand, there is authority for the view that such statutes are to be regarded as remedial legislation,<sup>80</sup> and as such should be construed liberally to one complying fairly with their terms.<sup>81</sup>

The terms of the statute determine the nature and extent of the right conferred.<sup>82</sup> This right of the surety to compel the creditor to act is not granted by implication by a statute giving a surety a right by suit against principal and creditor to compel payment by the principal of his debt to the creditor.<sup>83</sup> Under a statute providing that a surety may require his creditor to proceed against the principal, or to pursue any other remedy in his power which the surety himself cannot pursue, and that, if the creditor neglects to do so, the surety is exonerated to the extent to which he is thereby prejudiced, it has been held that the creditor is under no obligation, after notice, to pursue any remedy which the surety himself could pursue.<sup>84</sup>

Although there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>85</sup> it has been held that the rule exonerating the surety where the creditor fails or refuses to comply with the surety's request to proceed against the principal is not repealed or impaired by the provisions of the Negotiable Instruments Act.<sup>86</sup> The fact that the guaranteed contract was made in a foreign state is immaterial.<sup>87</sup> Where the creditor holds his claim by assignment, it has been held that his failure to act on notice discharges his assignor as well as the original surety of the claim.<sup>88</sup> A statute giving the surety a right to compel the creditor to bring action does not give him a right to compel the creditor to have the principal arrested, and failure of the creditor to comply with such a request does not discharge the surety.<sup>89</sup>

Nonresidence. A creditor, who otherwise would have been compelled to sue the principal after receiving notice from the surety to do so, in order to retain his right against the surety, is not bound to follow his principal out of the state.<sup>90</sup> If the principal is a nonresident at the time notice is given, and has no property within the state, failure of the creditor to sue does not discharge the surety.<sup>91</sup>

76. Statute goes to remedy and not right

A statute providing that the surety may at any time after the debt becomes due give notice in writing to the creditor to proceed to collect it from the principal, and if the creditor refuses or fails to commence an action within three months the surety shall be discharged, has been held to go only to the remedy and not to affect either the nature, obligation, construction, or validity of the contract, the statute being in the nature of a limitation of actions.—Sally v. Bank of Union, 103 S.E. 460, 150 Ga. 281—Overstreet v. W. T. Rawleigh Co., 43 S.E.2d 774, 75 Ga.App. 483.

There is a conflict of authority as to whether the nonresidence rule applies where the nonresident has property in the state which may be subjected to the payment of the debt. In some states the surety is not released;<sup>92</sup> in other states the failure of the creditor to proceed against the property discharges the surety.<sup>93</sup> It has been held that, where the statutes give the creditor the alternative of bringing suit himself or sending a copy of the contract to the surety and allowing him to sue in the creditor's name, nonresidence of the principal does not excuse a failure to comply.<sup>94</sup> Where residence of the principal is necessary to give effect to the surety's notice under the statute, the burden is on the surety to prove that the principal is within the jurisdiction.<sup>95</sup> If the creditor, being ignorant of the principal's residence, shows that he has exercised reasonable diligence to ascertain it, but without effect, the surety remains liable.<sup>96</sup>

Insanity. It has been held that the statute does not apply to claims against the estates of insane principals.<sup>97</sup>

Death. Where the statute requires the creditor to commence suit against the principal forthwith or within a stated time after receiving notice, it has been held that death of the principal before notice given,<sup>98</sup> or during the time allowed for commencing suit,<sup>99</sup> takes the case out of the statute, and the surety remains bound. However, where the statute allows a reasonable time after notice for the bringing of the action, it has been held that death of the principal does not excuse the creditor's failure to sue, and the surety is discharged,<sup>1</sup> if he shows that the principal left an estate in the state and that administration has been had.<sup>2</sup>

Availability of defense. The creditor's failure to act after notice has been held to be a defense available to the surety equally at law and in equity.<sup>3</sup> It is not lost by the fact that the surety has signed a note which contains the provisions that time of payment may be extended without discharging the surety;<sup>4</sup> nor is it unavailable because the suretyship contract provides that it shall not be necessary for the creditor to exhaust his remedies against the principal debtor before proceeding against the surety.<sup>5</sup> Of course, the defense is not open to the surety if no notice was given by him under the statute,<sup>6</sup> unless he was prevented from giving it by the creditor himself,<sup>7</sup> or if he has withdrawn it or waived it, as discussed infra § 222. If the surety for a consideration has consented to an extension of time, he cannot show in defense a notice to commence suit within that time.<sup>8</sup>

Extent of discharge. In those jurisdictions where the failure of the creditor to prosecute his claim against the principal debtor after demand by the surety is available to the surety as a defense the surety has been held to be discharged only to the extent of the loss which results.<sup>9</sup>

What law governs. The law of the place where the suretyship contract was made prevails over the law in force in the state where action is brought where the law in the two states differs.<sup>10</sup>

Cosureties. Such a statute has been held to give no protection to a surety against another surety by requiring the creditor to bring suit against the sureties, but is limited to a surety's requiring the creditor to bring suit against the principal debtor.<sup>11</sup> The discharge of a cosurety by a failure of the

§ 215. — Insolvency of Principal

There is a conflict of authority as to whether the subsequent insolvency of the principal operates to discharge a surety who had previously notified the creditor to sue.

There is a conflict of authority as to whether the subsequent insolvency of the principal operates to discharge a surety who had previously notified the creditor to sue, some courts holding that circumstance immaterial,<sup>13</sup> others holding on equitable grounds that the surety is discharged thereby,<sup>14</sup> if he can establish the fact that, when notice was given, the principal was solvent,<sup>15</sup> and not merely that he could pay this debt.<sup>16</sup> However, even in these states the surety is not discharged if it appears that the creditor offered to allow the surety to proceed against the principal by attachment<sup>17</sup> or that the principal was beyond the jurisdiction.<sup>18</sup>

Statutory provisions. Under statutes giving a surety a right on general terms to compel action by the creditor by giving him written notice and discharging him from further liability on the creditor's refusal or failure to comply, insolvency of the principal at the time notice was given by the surety,<sup>19</sup> or so soon thereafter as to make an action futile,<sup>20</sup> or at the time the suretyship contract was entered into<sup>21</sup> is an excuse for the creditor's noncompliance and the surety is not discharged. The burden is on the creditor to show that action would have been unavailing.<sup>22</sup> Under statutes conditioning the surety's right to compel action on the surety's apprehension that his principal is about to become insolvent it has been held that the surety is discharged on proof of apprehension of insolvency, the giving of notice to the creditor, and the refusal of the creditor to act within the time allowed,<sup>23</sup> and it is not necessary that the surety should go further with his proof and show that the principal later did become insolvent.<sup>24</sup> The surety's right does not accrue under such statute if the principal is shown to be already insolvent at the time of giving notice, the "apprehension" of the statute being related to a future condition.<sup>25</sup> However, evidence of insolvency at a prior time is not evidence of insolvency at the time, and apprehension of insolvency at a later time will then entitle the surety to proceed under the statute.<sup>26</sup>

§ 216. — Persons Entitled to Give Notice

The notice must come from the surety, or someone authorized to give it in his behalf, and the suretyship relation must have existed at the inception of the contract, although it is not necessary that it should appear from the instrument or that the creditor had knowledge of it at the time.

Person not a surety within statute

(1) One signing his name on back of note under printed provision that undersigned indorsers guaranteed payment of note and waived presentment, protest, etc., was guarantor as well as indorser of note, and not surety thereon, within statute authorizing surety to require creditor, by written notice, to commence ac-

the instrument<sup>29</sup> or even that the creditor had knowledge of it at the time the liability was created.<sup>30</sup> However, while it has been held that one who signs a note as accommodation maker is not a surety but the one primarily liable to a holder for value who has no knowledge that he is an accommodation maker only and cannot claim a right under the statute to give notice to such a holder,<sup>31</sup> it has been held that, as against one who knows that he is an accommodation maker, he is entitled to give notice.<sup>32</sup>

Where the statute giving the surety the right to compel action by notice restricts the privilege to sureties on certain designated contracts, only sureties within the enumerated classes can exercise the right.<sup>33</sup> It has been held that the right to give notice does not extend to involuntary sureties,<sup>34</sup> and that an indorser cannot claim the privilege<sup>35</sup> unless the indorsement was for the purpose of security merely.<sup>36</sup> On the other hand, it has been held that an accommodation acceptor can avail himself of it.<sup>37</sup> An indemnified surety is denied the privilege, since he has no equities;<sup>38</sup> but a surety's right is not taken away by the fact that he has made a part payment of the debt<sup>39</sup> or because he is officially connected with the creditor corporation.<sup>40</sup>

§ 217. — To Whom Notice May Be Given

Notice by a surety to proceed against the principal may be given to the person having legal title; but notice to an agent or attorney of the creditor will not suffice if the authority of such agent or attorney to receive it does not appear, even though the notice is in fact communicated to the creditor.

Notice by a surety to a creditor to proceed against the principal may be given to the person having the legal title without seeking an equitable owner;<sup>41</sup> and generally notice may be addressed to the holder of the instrument whether he holds it for collection<sup>42</sup> or as collateral security.<sup>43</sup> Notice to an agent or attorney of the creditor will not suffice if the authority of such agent or attorney to receive it does not appear,<sup>44</sup> even though the notice is in fact communicated to the creditor;<sup>45</sup> and generally notice to a public officer will not release a surety.<sup>46</sup> If there are two creditors, notice must be given to both.<sup>47</sup>

§ 218. — Time for Giving Notice

Generally speaking, the surety may give notice to the creditor to proceed against the principal at any time authorized by the statute creating the right; but it has been held that notice may not be given before a cause of action accrues to the creditor.

Generally speaking, the surety may give notice to the creditor to proceed against the principal at any time authorized by the statute creating the right.<sup>48</sup> Notice cannot be given before a cause of action accrues to the creditor<sup>49</sup> or before the amount due has been ascertained if a condition to the liability of the principal.<sup>50</sup> If the surety de-tion on note against principal debtor, and providing for forfeiture of creditor's right to amount due thereon, if he fails to commence action within reasonable time after such notice.—Galloway v. Barnesville Loan, 57 N.E.2d 337, 74 Ohio App. 23.

lays giving notice to the creditor to sue the principal until he himself has been sued by the creditor, it is not then too late for him to give the notice under a statute which permits him to give notice "at any time" after the debt becomes due,<sup>51</sup> although under a statute omitting these words it has been held that an action already started by the creditor against the surety alone exempts the creditor thereafter from application of the statute.<sup>52</sup> After the creditor has already recovered judgment against all on whom he could get service of process, notice cannot be served on him to bring another suit.<sup>53</sup>

§ 219. — Form and Sufficiency of Notice

- a. In general
- b. Under statutes

a. In General

In jurisdictions where, under common-law rule, a surety is discharged if he gives notice and the principal later becomes insolvent, an oral notice has been held sufficient, and it is not necessary that it should inform the creditor of facts suggesting the probability of loss if enforcement of payment is delayed.

In jurisdictions where, under the common-law rule, a surety is discharged if he gives notice and the principal later becomes insolvent, an oral notice has been held sufficient.<sup>54</sup> It is not necessary that it should inform the creditor of facts suggesting the probability of loss if enforcement of payment is delayed.<sup>55</sup> It has been held that it must be accompanied by an offer to indemnify the creditor.<sup>56</sup> A tender of expenses is not required, however, unless the creditor expressly puts his refusal to sue the principal on the ground of the cost.<sup>57</sup> The evidence of giving notice to the creditor must be clear.<sup>58</sup>

Generally speaking, statutory requirements as to the manner in which notice shall be given must be complied with strictly to effect the surety's release.<sup>59</sup> The statutes generally call for a written notice, and in such case an oral one will not operate as a release of the surety.<sup>60</sup> Since the requirement as to writing is a personal privilege of the creditor, it may be waived by him,<sup>61</sup> and the waiver may be either express<sup>62</sup> or implied, as where the creditor accepts oral notice and promises compliance therewith;<sup>63</sup> and a surety who relies on the creditor's promise under such circumstances and foregoes means of indemnity and protection is discharged when the creditor fails to bring suit.<sup>64</sup> Written notice is not waived by a failure to object to the introduction of evidence showing an oral request,<sup>65</sup> or by bringing a suit long afterward,<sup>66</sup> or because of a conversation which led the surety to presume that he was released.<sup>67</sup> In some states a waiver of written notice must itself be in writing to avail the surety.<sup>68</sup>

"Collect" and "institute suit"

(1) A notice by a surety requiring creditor to collect it from principal maker has been held insufficient under provision that a creditor may be required by a surety "forthwith to institute suit" on the contract involved.—Williams v. Zimmerman, 20 S.E.2d 785, 124 W.Va. 458.

(2) However, in a number of cases it has been held that a requirement by a surety that the creditor "collect" is equivalent to a demand "to institute suit."

County of debtor's residence

(1) Under a statute providing that no notice shall be considered a compliance which does not state county of principal's residence, notice must state county of principal debtor's residence.—Gettis v. Gormley, 175 S.E. 393, 49 Ga.App. 339—Bowen v. Mobley, 151 S.E. 667, 40 Ga.App. 833.

(2) A notice fatally defective in this respect, but received by the creditor with the remark "all right," could amount to nothing more than a promise by the creditor, without consideration, to proceed against the principal debtor, and would have no effect on the obligation of the surety.—Bowen v. Mobley, supra.

(3) A notice stating that the principal's residence is a named city or town, without stating the county, is not the notice required by the statute.—Seckinger v. Springfield Exch. Bank, 145 S.E. 94, 38 Ga.App. 667.

Registered mail; place of service

Where surety contract provided that any notice in any way affecting rights of creditor must be delivered by registered mail to creditor at cer-

son notified, it has been held that personal service is required,<sup>93</sup> and that the statute does not permit the mailing of a copy to such person.<sup>94</sup> Where neither the statute nor the contract makes provision for the manner of service of notice, it has been held that service by mail is sufficient.<sup>95</sup> The requirement of a written notice does not necessitate the making of the notice in duplicate, one copy to be served and the other retained by the surety.<sup>96</sup> Where the notice is in duplicate, either copy may be served.<sup>97</sup> Proof of service of notice must follow the statutory requirements where they exist.<sup>98</sup>

§ 221. — Compliance with Notice

- a. In general
- b. Time within which action must be begun
- c. Against whom action must be brought
- d. Necessity and sufficiency of prosecution

a. In General

On receipt of notice duly served, the creditor must comply with the statutory requirements or the surety will be discharged.

On receipt of notice duly served, the creditor must comply with the statutory requirements<sup>99</sup> either by bringing suit himself<sup>1</sup> or by sending the necessary papers to the surety and permitting him to sue in the creditor's name,<sup>2</sup> the creditor's duties and rights being determined by the terms of the statute in force when he receives the notice to sue.<sup>3</sup> The creditor is not compelled to resort to additional remedies, such as attachment, to enforce the collection of his claim;<sup>4</sup> nor is he obliged to realize on security in his hands if he offers to assign it to the surety on the latter's payment of the claim, and permits the surety to sue in the creditor's name.<sup>5</sup>

Courts open to creditor. The bringing of a suit in a court not having jurisdiction of the debtor is the equivalent of no suit at all and cannot be urged as compliance with the notice.<sup>6</sup> If the statute will be complied with by bringing suit in any one of two or more courts, the creditor has the privilege of selecting either, although the matter might be expedited if another were chosen.<sup>7</sup> However, where one of the courts open to the creditor has jurisdiction over the surety only, and the other has jurisdiction over both principal and surety, the creditor must bring his action in the latter court.<sup>8</sup>

The time within which an action must be commenced depends to a large extent on the terms of the statute imposing the duty on the creditor.

The time within which an action must be commenced depends to a large extent on the terms of the statute imposing the duty on the creditor.<sup>9</sup> Under some statutes action must be commenced within a reasonable time.<sup>10</sup> Under others action must be brought in the first term of court having jurisdiction, after notice is received,<sup>11</sup> and, under such a statute, if the court is in session when the notain place, sending a letter, which was not registered and was sent to a different place and which requested creditor to institute suit forthwith against principal did not exonerate such surety.—W. T. Rawleigh Co. v. Moore, supra.

Suit by nonresident in federal court having jurisdiction at first term of such court after notice was sufficient compliance, notwithstanding

tice is received, action must be brought at once, and not at a subsequent term.<sup>12</sup> Under still other statutes action must be commenced within a certain fixed time after receiving notice.<sup>13</sup> The statute places no obligation on the creditor to act prior to notice served on him by the surety,<sup>14</sup> and so a surety who complains of the time at which the creditor first took steps to realize on collateral held by him must show a prior demand for action at some earlier time.<sup>15</sup> A delay by the creditor in commencing suit may be justified, however, by circumstances, and by proof of diligence of the creditor therein,<sup>16</sup> provided the facts in justification are established by proof.<sup>17</sup> Delay is not excused by the fact that the surety is not injured thereby,<sup>18</sup> or by the country being in a state of civil war, if the courts are open.<sup>19</sup> Where a creditor justifies a failure to commence an action by denying receipt of notice, evidence of a cosurety's financial standing is admissible as tending to show that reliance thereon, and not the reason given, was the real ground for not bringing action.<sup>20</sup> It is a question of law whether a creditor has been duly diligent in proceeding against the principal.<sup>21</sup>

c. Against Whom Action Must Be Brought

The suit must be a suit against the principal, not the surety, and, where the statute provides who shall be made parties defendant, the statutory requirements must be met.

The suit contemplated by the statute is a suit against the principal, not the surety,<sup>22</sup> and, where the notice requires suit to be brought against all principals, if there are more than one, all must be sued.<sup>23</sup> The statute sometimes provides who shall be made parties defendant, and the statutory requirements must be met,<sup>24</sup> both principal and surety being necessary parties defendant in some jurisdictions;<sup>25</sup> principal only or principal and surety<sup>26</sup> but not the surety alone,<sup>27</sup> in others. A statute merely requiring that, on notice from the surety, the claim shall be put in suit has been construed to permit the bringing of an action against the surety alone without joining the principal,<sup>28</sup> the surety in such action being allowed, however, by notifying the principal, to have judgment against him at the same time that judgment is secured against himself by the creditor.<sup>29</sup>

d. Necessity and Sufficiency of Prosecution

The statute is not complied with by merely instituting suit, but it also includes the duty of prosecuting it with due diligence.

The statute is not complied with by merely instituting suit, but it also includes the duty of prosecuting it with due diligence,<sup>30</sup> a surety being discharged if the suit once instituted is dismissed for some cause not explained,<sup>31</sup> or by failure properly to plead,<sup>32</sup> or by failure to take out an alias summons to the next term if service is not obtained at the first,<sup>33</sup> or by failure to prosecute to effect,<sup>34</sup> or by an inexcusable delay in taking out execution of the judgment,<sup>35</sup> unless the statute only requires diligence in prosecuting the suit "to judging it was not brought at first term of state court.—Mississippi Valley Trust Co. v. Brewer, supra.

ment," in which case the creditor is under no obligation to take out execution.<sup>36</sup> A statute requiring a creditor to take out execution against the principal on notice by the surety does not require the taking out of a second execution if one has been taken out already.<sup>37</sup> Where execution is issued but is stayed for sufficient reasons, it has been held that the surety is not discharged.<sup>38</sup> It has also been held that a statute requiring commencement of action after notice does not require the bringing of a second action where it is shown that an action against the principal had already been filed before notice received in the county of his residence but that the sheriff had made a return that he could not be found.<sup>39</sup>

§ 222. — Withdrawal or Waiver of Notice

A surety's release from liability by reason of the creditor's failure to sue the principal debtor may be waived, and such waiver may be effected by a provision in the suretyship contract, or by acts or conduct of the surety after giving notice.

A surety's release from liability by reason of the creditor's failure to sue the principal debtor may be waived.<sup>40</sup> Such waiver may be effected by a provision in the suretyship contract,<sup>41</sup> or by acts or conduct of the surety after giving notice.<sup>42</sup> The surety may waive or withdraw his notice by requesting the creditor not to sue,<sup>43</sup> or by acquiescing in the dismissal of a suit brought in compliance with his notice,<sup>44</sup> in which case the surety's liability continues. A surety does not waive his rights under a notice given to the creditor to sue by requesting an indulgence for his creditor after the statutory time for bringing suit has elapsed,<sup>45</sup> or by asking for indulgence for himself, not for the principal.<sup>46</sup> Waiving diligence or promptness in bringing a suit against the principal does not mean acquiescence in the failure to bring any suit at all.<sup>47</sup>

H. RELEASE

§ 223. Release of Principal

The release of the principal debtor, without the consent of the surety, releases the surety, but it has been held that the creditor in releasing the principal may reserve his rights against the surety.

The general rule is that the release of the principal debtor, without the consent of the surety, releases the surety.<sup>48</sup> Similarly, it has been held that a covenant not to sue the principal will release the

Reason for rule

The surety is discharged because he cannot recover over against a principal who has been discharged by his creditor.—Sarasota County, Fla., v. American Surety Co. of New York, C.C.A.Fla., 68 F.2d 543.

Release of subsequent grantee assurety.<sup>49</sup> While it has been held that, where the principal debtor by the terms of the release is fully discharged, the reservation of a right to enforce the claim against the surety is ineffectual,<sup>50</sup> and that the claim against the surety is not preserved unless it appears from the reservation that the release is, in fact, a mere covenant not to sue, and not a discharge of the principal debtor,<sup>51</sup> other authorities have held that a creditor, in releasing the principal debtor, may reserve his rights against a surety, and by such reservation the surety may be held liable for the unpaid part of the debt.<sup>52</sup>

In the absence of a statute otherwise providing, a surety is not discharged by release of the principal if he consents thereto;<sup>53</sup> or if he waives his right to defend on that ground;<sup>54</sup> or if, when he became surety, security was placed in his hands to indemnify him against possible loss from his undertaking;<sup>55</sup> or if he has undertaken, by a new contract with the creditor, to settle the matter of his own liability;<sup>56</sup> or where a statute provides that the release of the principal shall not operate as a discharge of the surety.<sup>57</sup> Of course, a surety is not discharged by release of his principal given by the creditor after he has assigned his claim to another,<sup>58</sup> or by the release of a third person, who assisted the principal in committing the default,<sup>59</sup> unless the rights of the sureties are interfered with thereby, resulting in loss to them.<sup>60</sup>

So the sureties are not released where the transaction relied on as constituting a release of the principal does not have that legal effect,<sup>61</sup> as where it is without consideration,<sup>62</sup> or is so indefinite and uncertain as to be unenforceable,<sup>63</sup> or is procured by the principal's fraud,<sup>64</sup> unless the surety summing notes secured by lien also released the maker of the notes who stood in relation of surety.—Mays v. Sanders, Tex.Civ.App., 36 S.W. 108.

is injured by the passiveness of the obligee after discovery of the fraud.<sup>65</sup> At common law the release of a debtor whose person was in execution on a capias ad satisfaciendum extinguished the judgment itself and the liability of the judgment debtor's surety,<sup>66</sup> but this rule has been held not to apply to a commitment in contempt proceedings so as to release the sureties of the contemnor,<sup>67</sup> or to a discharge from imprisonment under a capias ad satisfaciendum, where the statutes preserve the judgment.<sup>68</sup> The liability of a surety once released cannot be revived without his consent;<sup>69</sup> and, if the surety, in ignorance of the release of the principal, has made payment, he can recover the amount paid.<sup>70</sup> A partial release operates to discharge the surety pro tanto only.<sup>71</sup>

§ 224. — Release of One of Several Principals

A release of one of several persons jointly bound as principals releases the surety on their bond, but this rule does not apply when the coprincipal was released from a different obligation than the one on which the surety is bound.

The general rule is that a release of one of several persons jointly bound as principals releases the surety on their bond,<sup>72</sup> but this rule does not apply when the coprincipal was released from a different obligation than the one on which the surety is bound.<sup>73</sup> Where a bond is given by joint trustees binding them jointly for their joint acts and each one severally for his own act, it has been held that the release of a trustee not in default does not release the surety from liability for a cotrustee's own acts.<sup>74</sup> A release to principals with a joint and several liability contingent on performance of a settlement agreement by one will not relieve the surety of the other, in the event of failure of the first to fulfill his obligation under the settlement.<sup>75</sup>

§ 225. — Compromise and Settlement

A composition, or compromise and settlement, between the creditor and the principal, by which the latter is discharged from liability, discharges his surety.

Compromise of suit against receiver

Makers of note, executed as collateral to original notes, were held exonerated by creditors' compromise of suit involving originals against debtor's receiver.—First Nat. Bank v. Holding, 4 P.2d 709, 90 Mont. 529.

Surety not deprived of right to restrain creditor

Where claimed reservation of right against surety does not appear on face of composition agreement, the fact that the agreement provides that those released shall have the benefit of legislative enactments with respect to the compromise and discharge of claims against one or more joint debtors does not deprive mere surety of right to injunction restraining creditor from maintaining action against him.—Slatoff v. Theurich, 199 A. 49, 123 N. J.Eq. 593.

Discharge not revoked

Where subcontractor was discharged by settlement with principal contractor, subcontractor's surety was discharged and such discharge was not revoked by subsequent action of subcontractor in suing on the subcontract rather than on the settlement agreement.—Haddad v. Western Contracting Corp., D.C.W.Va., 71 F.Supp. 212.

the result of new security given by the principal to the creditor which has proved worthless.<sup>77</sup> However, an unconsummated<sup>78</sup> or fraudulent<sup>79</sup> agreement to compromise, falling short of any effective settlement, will not discharge the surety. A surety is discharged by failure of the creditor to rescind promptly after knowledge that a settlement with the principal was procured through the latter's fraud<sup>80</sup> or through mistake.<sup>81</sup>

§ 226. — Effect on Collateral Securities

A release of the principal also will release sureties liable on collateral security for the debt, and property pledged or mortgaged to secure the debt.

A release of the principal also will release sureties liable on collateral security for the debt,<sup>82</sup> and property pledged<sup>83</sup> or mortgaged to secure the debt.<sup>84</sup>

§ 227. Release of Surety

The surety is discharged by an express release of his liability pursuant to an arrangement between the creditor and surety, or between the creditor and principal.

The surety is discharged by an express release of his liability pursuant to an arrangement between the creditor and the surety,<sup>85</sup> or between the creditor and the principal.<sup>86</sup> In order to effect his discharge an agreement for the release of a surety must amount to a binding and enforceable contract,<sup>87</sup> and it is no defense that there was a mere understanding that the surety was to be released.<sup>88</sup> A surety is not discharged by a contract for his release made between the creditor and the principal, and unexecuted through no fault of the creditor,<sup>89</sup> nor is a retiring partner released as surety because the creditor has all of his dealings with the continuing partners.<sup>90</sup> Sureties cannot release themselves from their obligations and undertakings by their own acts and conduct without the consent of the creditor.<sup>91</sup>

Formal requisites. In the absence of statute, no particular form of release is required.<sup>92</sup> It has been held that a surety on a note may not under the terms of the Negotiable Instruments Act be discharged by a parol release.<sup>93</sup>

Transaction not a "settlement"

A bank's acceptance of its embezzling cashier's property without notice to surety company, which had bound itself to indemnify the bank, under an agreement to sell, apply on indebtedness, and pay the balance, if any, to cashier, was held not a "settlement" within a provision of the bond releasing surety in case of settlement by the bank, since the bank did not release debtor or condone his offense, and surety was not deprived of any right which it would have against the cashier on paying the bond.—*Bank of Waterproof v. therewith may discharge the surety irrespective of consideration where he acts on them to his injury.

An executory agreement for the release of the surety does not discharge him unless supported by consideration,<sup>94</sup> although representations made in connection therewith may discharge the surety irrespective of consideration where he acts on them to his injury.<sup>95</sup> Where there is a consideration, the release being in writing, it need not be recited.<sup>96</sup> A payment by the principal<sup>97</sup> or by the surety<sup>98</sup> on account of past-due principal indebtedness will not support an agreement to release the surety. However, in the application of the general rules as to what may constitute a consideration, it has been held, among other instances,<sup>99</sup> that a payment by the surety which is not to be credited on the indebtedness,<sup>1</sup> or a note of the principal for an additional sum,<sup>2</sup> is a sufficient consideration. Likewise, a consideration exists if, by agreement of all the parties, the creditor, having property of the principal to apply to the secured debt, is to apply it in extinguishment of another debt of the principal for which the surety is not liable<sup>3</sup> or if the surety has performed,<sup>4</sup> or agrees to perform,<sup>5</sup> services. A refusal of a judgment creditor to levy on the property of the principal at the instance of the surety,<sup>6</sup> the acceptance of another surety<sup>7</sup> or of a mortgage,<sup>8</sup> or the agreement of the surety to refrain from taking indemnity from the principal<sup>9</sup> constitutes a sufficient consideration.

§ 229. — Conditional Release

If the release is contingent on performance of specified conditions, it will not be operative unless such conditions are performed.

If the release is contingent on performance of specified conditions, it will not be operative unless such conditions are performed.<sup>10</sup>

§ 230. — Effect on Supplemental and Collateral Sureties

Since a surety occupies the position of principal to a supplemental surety, it has been held that a release of the surety will discharge the supplemental surety.

Since a surety occupies the position of principal to a supplemental surety, a release of the surety ordinarily will discharge the supplemental surety.<sup>11</sup> If, after a judgment against the principal has been affirmed, he obtains an injunction restraining further proceedings, a release of a surety on the injunction bond releases a surety on the supersedeas bond, at least to the extent of the property owned by the former.<sup>12</sup>

§ 231. Release of Cosurety

By the strict rule of the common law, where cosureties are bound jointly, a release of one discharges all, but in equity a release of one or more sureties will not have the effect of discharging the others, except from the payment of the proportion of the debt which the sureties discharged ought to have contributed, and the equitable rule is now frequently accepted.

By the strict rule of the common law, where cosureties are bound jointly, a release of one discharges all,<sup>13</sup> although such result does not follow a covenant not to sue,<sup>14</sup> or a release so construed.<sup>15</sup>

Consent

Where sureties by written instrument authorized principal to release one surety on signing by another in surety's stead, substituted surety was not under terms of instrument required to affix his signature to original instrument of suretyship with respect to sureties' liability thereon; and, where substituted surety agreed in separate instrument to guarantee amount of contract in place of surety, sureties were not released from liability on ground that substituted surety was guarantor and not surety, where substituted surety intended by instrument to accept full liability of released surety and take his place as surety.—Vermont Marble Co. v. as where rights against other cosureties are reserved.<sup>16</sup>

In equity, however, the cosureties remain liable for their proportionate share,<sup>17</sup> more particularly where rights are reserved as against the sureties not released,<sup>18</sup> or where the intention not to release the other sureties is apparent;<sup>19</sup> and the equitable rule is now frequently accepted<sup>20</sup> in some cases under the application of statutes permitting the release or compromise of a claim against one joint debtor without discharge of the others.<sup>21</sup> Under this rule the cosureties are entitled to a reduction of their total liability to the extent that on performance of their obligations the released surety could have been compelled to make contribution,<sup>22</sup> but, where suit for contribution could not have been maintained against the released surety, the remaining sureties are not entitled to a reduction of their total liability.<sup>23</sup>

Where the cosureties are bound severally, a discharge of one does not discharge the others,<sup>24</sup> unless a right of contribution has been taken away or seriously affected,<sup>25</sup> and the same rule has been applied in some jurisdictions where they are bound jointly and severally.<sup>26</sup> So, the discharge of one of several sureties from a joint and several obligation with an express reservation as to the other

obligors does not release the other sureties.<sup>27</sup> Where a bond is joint and several in its terms, one surety cannot claim to be discharged because the other surety is relieved on a plea which is purely personal.<sup>28</sup> Where the sureties are not bound by the same but by separate instruments, a release of one will not release the others.<sup>29</sup>

Unenforceable release. An attempted release which is not enforceable because of a lack of consideration will not release the cosureties.<sup>30</sup> A release, without authority, is a nullity, and will not affect the liability of cosureties.<sup>31</sup>

Accord and satisfaction. Acceptance by the creditor, from one cosurety of his proportionate part of the debt, does not amount to accord and satisfaction.<sup>32</sup>

Surety who has become coprincipal. If a surety, by subsequent acts, has become a coprincipal, as between himself and his cosurety, his release will release his former cosurety entirely.<sup>33</sup>

Statutory provisions for release. Under a statute providing that the release, discharge, voluntary withdrawal, or incompetency of a surety on any official bond does not affect the bond as to the remaining sureties thereon, or alter or change their liability in any respect, the release of one

cosurety on an official bond does not operate as a discharge of the others.<sup>34</sup> A similar rule has been applied in the case of the release of a surety on a guardian's bond under a statute authorizing the release of such a surety by the court on application therefor.<sup>35</sup> Likewise, where provision is made for a cancellation of the liability of a surety on the bond of a public depository by statutory notice of withdrawal, the withdrawal of one or more of the sureties does not terminate the liability of the remaining sureties.<sup>36</sup>

A discharge by order of court of a surety's cosureties, on their payment of their proportionate amount of the liability, does not release the surety from liability for his proportionate share.<sup>37</sup>

I. DISCHARGE BY OPERATION OF LAW

§ 232. In General

The general rule that a surety is discharged when the liability of his principal is extinguished does not apply when the extinction is caused by operation of law, and not by the act of the creditor, but, if the contract of the principal is changed or enlarged by statute or order of court, the surety may be discharged.

The general rule that a surety is discharged when the liability of his principal is extinguished, as discussed supra § 116, does not apply when the extinction is caused by operation of law, and not by the act of the creditor,<sup>38</sup> and the defense is personal to the principal,<sup>39</sup> but the surety remains liable.<sup>40</sup> However, if the contract of the principal is changed or enlarged by legislative enactment,<sup>41</sup> or by order of court,<sup>42</sup> the general rule as to discharge by alteration of contract applies, and the surety is discharged, unless the contract was entered into subject to the power of the legislature to change the law.<sup>43</sup>

Statutory method. In some jurisdictions statutes provide a method for a surety on certain obligations to obtain a discharge from liability thereon,<sup>44</sup> as by petition to a court for a discharge and an order requiring the principal to give a new bond.<sup>45</sup> Such statutory method has been held not to abrogate the surety's common-law right to be discharged.<sup>46</sup> It has been held that the Negotiable Instruments Act does not abrogate common-law or statutory methods already in existence under which a surety on a note who signs on the face thereof may be discharged.<sup>47</sup> However, it has also been held that such surety cannot be discharged in a manner other than that provided in the Negotiable Instruments Act.<sup>48</sup>

The discharge of a cosurety by operation of law does not release the other sureties,<sup>49</sup> or reduce

Statute construed

(1) A statute providing that the obligation of the surety shall cease if the obligation of the principal from any cause becomes extinct has been held to be a mere affirmation of the common law rule, the words "from any cause" meaning any cause dependent on an act of the creditor, and not including a cause in which the law was the mover and over which the creditor has no control and with which his acts have nothing to do.—Franklin v. Mobley, 42 S.E.2d 755, 202 Ga. 212—Phillips v. Solomon, 42 Ga. 192.

(2) Even if such statute were construed as embracing an extinction of the principal's debt by operation of law, a statute merely abrogating all remedies for the enforcement of a debt would not render the debt itself extinct within the meaning of such statute.—Franklin v. Mobley, supra.

their liability pro tanto.<sup>50</sup> The liability of a surety who has been discharged from his obligation by operation of law cannot, without his consent, be revived against him by the voluntary act of a cosurety.<sup>51</sup>

§ 233. Bar of Action by Limitations

There is a conflict of authority as to whether a surety is discharged merely because the cause of action against the principal is barred by limitations; it has been held that a surety is not discharged because the statute of limitations has run in favor of a cosurety.

There is a conflict of authority as to whether a surety is discharged merely because the cause of action against the principal is barred,<sup>52</sup> some courts holding that he is not discharged,<sup>53</sup> others holding that he is.<sup>54</sup> A surety is not discharged because the statute of limitations has run in favor of a cosurety,<sup>55</sup> but he remains liable for the whole debt.<sup>56</sup>

§ 234. Change of Parties or Status

- a. In general
- b. Principal
- c. Creditor or obligee
- d. Surety

a. In General

Generally speaking, a material change in the status of the original parties to a contract involving suretyship which affects their substantial rights operates to discharge the surety.

Where there is a material change of the status of the original parties to a contract involving suretyship which affects their substantial rights, without the knowledge or consent of the surety, it has been held that the surety is relieved from any obligation thereunder.<sup>57</sup> Thus, the liability of sureties on a bond given to certain person or persons as obligees is terminated by such obligees becoming incorporated,<sup>58</sup> or by an unincorporated company, constituted by the obligees, being merged into an incorporated company,<sup>59</sup> or by the obligee entering into a partnership,<sup>60</sup> or by the obligor, a corporation, merging with another corporation and losing its identity.<sup>61</sup> However, where the security runs to a fraternal organization and is for the benefit of a subordinate branch, it has been held that a change of status of the beneficiary which is immaterial to the risk, as by incorporation, will not release the sureties.<sup>62</sup>

b. Principal

Set-off on merger not justified

Where note on which defendants claimed to be only secondarily liable was merged with note on which defendants were primarily liable, the payee's failure to proceed against the principal on the merged note before the statute of limitations had run would not justify setting off amount of merged note against amount of note sued on, since defendants had power and duty to make delay harmless and protect themselves from loss, and their failure to do so constituted negligence on their part precluding their holding payee liable on ground of negligence; nor could set off be justified on ground of contract by payee to see that merged note did not outlaw the first note, where alleged agreement was unsupported by consideration and was, therefore, invalid.—Legal Adjustment Bureau v. consented.<sup>63</sup> He will be discharged by the erasure of the name of the principal,<sup>64</sup> or by substitution<sup>65</sup> or addition<sup>66</sup> of principals. The insertion in the body of the bond as a principal of the name of a surety who has signed the bond, and its subsequent erasure, will not release sureties who signed after the insertion and before the erasure when the bond, considered as a whole, shows the surety's true relation.<sup>67</sup> A surety is not discharged by a removal of the principal from one place to another;<sup>68</sup> but, if a surety has become liable for the principal in a particular building, the surety is not liable for another person who succeeds to the occupancy of that building, although the creditor is not notified of the change.<sup>69</sup> The dissolution of a corporation by the governor because of delinquency in the payment of a license fee will not discharge a surety on its bond where the statute provides that such delinquency shall not operate to impair the rights of others.<sup>70</sup>

c. Creditor or Obligees

In general, a surety is discharged by a change of the obligee without his consent.<sup>71</sup> So a surety on an undertaking given to two or more joint obligees or creditors is not liable after any change in such obligees<sup>72</sup> unless the intention, appearing from the instrument, is to be bound to the obligees as a class or fluctuating body.<sup>73</sup> A surety for a purchaser of goods from a partnership will be discharged by the withdrawal of a member of the partnership before the time for performance of the contract.<sup>74</sup> Where a corporation is the obligee, its dissolution releases sureties on bonds held by it.<sup>75</sup> After the consolidation of two or more corporations, sureties on bonds given to such corporations are sometimes liable to the new corporation, by virtue of the statutory provisions under which such consolidation is effected.<sup>76</sup>

d. Surety

As a general rule a surety will be discharged by a change of cosureties, but it has been held that, where sureties are severally bound for specified sums, the addition of other sureties separately bound for specific sums will not discharge the prior sureties.

A surety will be discharged by the erasure of the name of a cosurety<sup>77</sup> or by a substitution of

Third person taking over construction contract

(1) When a principal and his surety fail to complete a contract, the reletting of the work under conditions differing from the former contract in order to complete the undertaking does not of itself discharge the principal and surety thereof.—State v. Smith, 119 So. 56, 167 La. 301.

(2) So, where a surety under a building contract agreed with the owner on default of the contractor to complete the contract under the supervision of a third party and the agreement provided that the third party should pay a debt owing by him to the owner and evidenced by a note, it has been held that the agreement did not relieve the surety from liability on the ground that the third party appointed to complete the contract could not act disinterestedly between the parties, and that his acts resulted to the prejudice of the surety, of which there was no showing.—Keenan v. Empire State Surety Co., 113 P. 636, 63 Wash. 250.

(3) Where a contractor gave a bond to pay all persons for labor and materials supplied in connection with the work and a subcontractor for bricks became financially embarrassed and a materialman of the subcontractor continued to furnish bricks to parties carrying on the original contracts, who had an interest to do so, the surety on the bond was not relieved from liability.—Phila. v. Nichols Co., 63 A. 886, 214 Pa. 265.

(4) However, it has been held that, where a third person takes over a construction contract, the contractor's surety is not liable for work done by such third person.—Northern Minnesota Drainage Co. v. Mageau, 154 N.W. 1092, 131 Minn. 243.

cosureties.<sup>78</sup> It has been held that the addition of a cosurety after the execution and delivery of the suretyship contract will discharge the sureties who signed at the inception of the contract,<sup>79</sup> but the added sureties are bound.<sup>80</sup> However, it has been held that, where sureties are severally bound for specified sums, the addition of other sureties separately bound for specific sums will not discharge the prior sureties,<sup>81</sup> and that the addition of a guaranty<sup>82</sup> or supplemental sureties<sup>83</sup> will not affect the liability of a surety.

§ 235. — Assignment or Transfer

Generally, an assignment of the principal contract by the obligee or the obligor discharges the surety, unless he consents thereto or the right to assign was contemplated by the contract, but the rule is otherwise as to assignments of leases.

An assignment of the principal contract by the obligee discharges the surety unless he consents thereto, where the contract runs to a designated obligee,<sup>84</sup> except in the case of an assignment for collection merely.<sup>85</sup> So, an assignment of a contract by the principal will discharge a surety for its performance<sup>86</sup> unless the right to assign was contemplated by the contract.<sup>87</sup> However, an assignment of a contract by the principal so as to enable the assignee to act as his agent will not release the surety.<sup>88</sup> The consent of both contracting parties to the assignment of a contract is necessary in order to release a surety thereon,<sup>89</sup> and, where the assent of one of two or more obligees is not sufficient to vary the obligation of the contract, the assent of one will not release the surety.<sup>90</sup>

Assignment of lease. As a general rule the assignment of a lease by the tenant does not discharge his surety from liability;<sup>91</sup> especially is this true where the right to assign was contemplated by the lease.<sup>92</sup> The same is true as to assignments by the lessor where the parties contemplated that the lease should be assignable.<sup>93</sup> However, if the right to assign is negatived in the lease, its assignment, if accepted by the lessor, will release a surety of the lessee,<sup>94</sup> and, likewise, the surety is released

Where lease of Indian coal lands provided that an assignment thereof should not be made without the approval of the secretary of the interior, and assignment of lease also provided that it was subject to secretary's approval, assignment was void and ineffectual in absence of the requisite approval, and, hence, there was no alteration of surety's contract with assignor, and surety was not discharged from its obligation under assignor's bond.—American Surety Co. of New York v. if the landlord voluntarily accepts another as his tenant by way of substitution for the first lessee,<sup>95</sup> especially where the lease contemplates such substitution and provides for the release of the first lessee from further liability on a substitution made in accordance with the terms of the lease.<sup>96</sup> It has been held that an assignment by the assignee of a lease will release his surety from further liability.<sup>97</sup>

Transfer of business and property. The transfer of the business of a contractor to a corporation formed for that purpose during the progress of the work on a contract does not release the surety on the bond of such contractor conditioned on the payment by such contractor, his heirs, successors, executors, or administrators to all persons supplying him or them with labor or materials in the prosecution of the work.<sup>98</sup> Also, the transfer by a corporation of its business and property to another will not release its sureties on a note where the obligee refused to take the transferee's note in lieu of that of the corporation.<sup>99</sup> A surety on notes executed in payment of property will not be discharged where, subsequent to the transfer, with his knowledge and consent, of the property to another, the seller assented to the transfer, on the transferee assuming payment of the notes, no agreement being made to release either the original purchaser or his surety.<sup>1</sup>

§ 236. — Bankruptcy or Insolvency of Parties

The effect of a discharge in bankruptcy as to sureties of the bankrupt is discussed in Bankruptcy

§ 581, and the discharge in bankruptcy of a claim against the bankrupt as surety is considered Bankruptcy § 566. The operation and effect of a discharge in insolvency proceedings are discussed in Insolvency § 17.

§ 237. — Dissolution or Receivership of Corporate Surety

The dissolution or receivership of a surety company will not release it from liability on its surety bond.

The dissolution<sup>2</sup> or receivership<sup>3</sup> of a surety company will not release it from liability on its surety bond.

§ 238. — Formation of, or Change in Partnership

A surety for one person as principal is not liable for the acts of a partnership of which his principal is a member, or for the acts of a partnership afterward formed by the principal with another; and a surety for a partnership cannot be held liable for debts or obligations incurred after a change in the personnel of the firm, unless the suretyship contract contemplates such liability.

A surety for one person as principal is not liable for the acts of a partnership of which his principal is a member,<sup>4</sup> or for the acts of a partnership afterward formed by the principal with another,<sup>5</sup> nor is a surety for an individual liable for materials furnished his partner and charged to such partner individually.<sup>6</sup> However, if a principal, who takes in a partner after the formation of the suretyship contract, is treated and continues to act in an individual capacity, his surety will not be discharged.<sup>7</sup> A surety for a partnership cannot

Surety becoming partner

The obligation of a surety on a note is not changed by the fact that the surety afterward becomes a partner in the business of the principal; nor would the fact that a note was afterward renewed when the surety was a partner to the principal maker change the obligation.—Runyan v. Moon, 267 Ill. 312.

not be held for debts or obligations incurred after a change in the personnel of the firm<sup>8</sup> unless the suretyship contract contemplates a continuing security for the firm without reference to its composition.<sup>9</sup> So a surety for a firm is not liable after a new member is added<sup>10</sup> or after a change caused by the withdrawal of a member or the dissolution of the firm, as by the death of a member.<sup>11</sup> However, if the surety has become liable for the performance of a particular contract by a partnership, its subsequent dissolution before the completion of the contract will not release him from liability for each of the former partners as far as that particular contract is concerned,<sup>12</sup> unless the contract is thereby discharged.<sup>13</sup>

§ 239. — Consent of Surety to Change

A surety who consents to a change of principals is not released from liability on his suretyship contract.

A surety who consents to a change of principals is, in accordance with the general rules as to consent and waiver of defenses by a surety, as discussed supra §§ 158-160, not released from liability on his suretyship contract.<sup>14</sup>

§ 240. Death of Parties

b. Death of surety

a. In General

As a general rule the death of the principal has no effect on the liability of his surety as to anything which occurred prior to his death unless the cause of action is such as abates with the death of the principal.

As a general rule the death of the principal has no effect on the liability of his surety as to anything which occurred prior to his death,<sup>15</sup> unless the cause of action is such as abates with the death of the principal.<sup>16</sup> If the obligation was for a fixed term or undertaking, the surety is liable as to defaults arising after the principal's death, whether or not an administrator has been appointed.<sup>17</sup> If, however, the liability of the principal terminates with his death, his sureties cannot be held for anything which arises thereafter.<sup>18</sup> So a surety for a firm is not liable for the acts of the surviving partners after the death of one<sup>19</sup> unless it appears that the suretyship contract created a continuing liability.<sup>20</sup>

b. Death of Surety

As a general rule the liability of a surety is not discharged by his death unless the suretyship contract discloses an intention to discharge him, but equity will not enforce payment from the surety's estate where it does not appear that the principal is unable to pay, and, while the surety's liability remains contingent, it is not enforceable in the probate court.

As a general rule the liability of a surety is not discharged by his death,<sup>21</sup> especially where the Liability of surety on bail bond as surviving death of surety see Bail § 83.

Even though the contract does not purport to bind heirs, executors, or administrators, the rule stated in the text applies.—Thommen v. Aldine Trust Co., 153 A. 750, 302 Pa. 409—White v. Commonwealth, 39 Pa. 167.

Divisible contracts. Where the consideration passes at different times, and the contract is, therefore, separate and divisible, it has been held that the liability of the estate of the surety is terminated by his death, and notice of that event,<sup>28</sup> but not by the death of the surety without such notice.<sup>29</sup>

Where liability of surety is joint. Under the common-law rule, where the liability of the surety is joint, his estate is not liable in an action at law after his death,<sup>30</sup> although in equity it has been held that his estate is discharged only where it appears that he has received no benefit from the joint obligation.<sup>31</sup> The common-law rule applies, even though the contract is in terms made binding on the executors and administrators of the obligors.<sup>32</sup> It does not apply, however, where the contract is several as well as joint,<sup>33</sup> or where the contract was made joint instead of several by fraud or mistake,<sup>34</sup> or there was a previous equity which gave the promisee a right to a several indemnity from each of the obligors, as in case of money loaned to both of them.<sup>35</sup> Moreover, under statutory modifications of the common-law rule, the surety is not discharged by his death, but his estate remains liable, although the surety was jointly liable.<sup>36</sup>

One cosurety, after the death of the other, is not freed from liability,<sup>37</sup> especially where he has knowledge of the death of his cosurety and makes no effort to withdraw,<sup>38</sup> or the liability sought to be enforced is for defaults occurring after the death of the cosurety.<sup>39</sup>

§ 242. Judgment and Execution against Principal Alone

The creditor's recovery of an unsatisfied judgment against the principal does not discharge the surety, and the mere levy of an execution under a judgment against the principal is not in itself a discharge of the surety.

The creditor's recovery of an unsatisfied judgment against the principal does not discharge the surety.<sup>41</sup> However, if the judgment is paid by the principal, the surety is discharged.<sup>42</sup> Where several notes are sued on in one action against the principal and the execution is satisfied only in part, a surety for some of the notes may insist on a proportional application on the notes on which he is liable.<sup>43</sup>

The mere levy of an execution under a judgment against the principal is not in itself a discharge of the surety.<sup>44</sup> Generally, there is no satisfaction in favor of a surety if, without any neglect or fault of plaintiff or the officer, the levy has failed to result in actual satisfaction.<sup>45</sup>

§ 243. Judgment against Surety and Principal

As a general rule the relation of principal and surety is not terminated by a judgment against the principal and surety, although there is authority to the contrary.

The general rule is that the relation of principal and surety is not terminated by reason of a judgment having been obtained against the principal and surety.<sup>46</sup> However, there is authority to the contrary.<sup>47</sup> An attempt has been made by one court to reconcile the cases on the theory that in equity the unanimous rule is that the relation is not terminated by reason of the judgment,<sup>48</sup> while there is a conflict in the law cases.<sup>49</sup> As long as the relation continues, the equities which inhere therein obtain and are available for the surety's relief.<sup>50</sup> It has been held that as against all persons chargeable with notice that a judgment debtor is a surety, any act which would have relieved the judgment debtor before judgment has the same effect after judgment and constitutes a sufficient defense to any action thereon, notwithstanding the judgment did not determine whether the liability was primary or secondary.<sup>51</sup> Where an execution is issued against the principal and his surety jointly, and levied on the property of the surety only, and the property is released by the execution plaintiff at his request, the levy is not a satisfaction of the execution in favor of the surety; and it can make no difference that the principal, whose property was not levied on, did not consent to the release.<sup>52</sup>

§ 244. Stay or Extension Granted by Court

A stay or extension granted by the court will not discharge the surety, especially if the order or judgment is invalid or revocable.

A stay or extension granted by the court will not discharge the surety,<sup>53</sup> especially if the order or judgment is invalid<sup>54</sup> or revocable.<sup>55</sup>

The state, in the collection of penalties, is held not to occupy the position of an ordinary creditor, and the respite of a replevied fine by the governor will not release the sureties on the replevy bond.<sup>56</sup>

VII. RIGHTS AND REMEDIES OF CREDITOR

A. AGAINST PRINCIPAL

§ 245. In General

A creditor's right to maintain an action against a principal exists independently of his rights as against the surety.

The right of the creditor to maintain an action against the principal exists independently of his rights as against the surety,<sup>57</sup> and he may maintain a bill in equity against the principal even though he has a remedy at law against the surety;<sup>58</sup> and his remedy at law against the surety need not first be exhausted.<sup>59</sup> On the other hand, if there is a clear remedy at law against the surety, equity will not entertain jurisdiction of a bill brought against the representatives of a deceased principal and surety jointly.<sup>60</sup> The right of the creditor to proceed against the principal alone is not affected by the fact that other creditors of the principal may be unable to satisfy their claims.<sup>61</sup> A release of the surety does not affect the liability of the principal.<sup>62</sup> An extension of time granted to the surety does not affect the liability of the principal.<sup>63</sup> Where an action is dismissed as to the surety and prosecuted against the principal alone, the rule of strict construction of the contract in favor of the obligors does not apply.<sup>64</sup>

Separate actions cannot be maintained at the same time against the principal and the sureties.<sup>65</sup>

§ 246. Defenses in General

Where the principal alone is sued, he may interpose only such defenses as are relevant to the suit, and may not set up a defense available only to a surety.

A principal may not set up defenses available only to a surety.<sup>66</sup> Limitation provisions in the bond are not available to the principal if he is sued on the contract to secure the performance of which the bond was given.<sup>67</sup>

§ 247. Payment by Surety

Payment by a surety prevents recovery from the principal.

Payment by the surety prevents recovery from the principal,<sup>68</sup> and part payment by the surety will discharge the principal to the extent of the amount paid.<sup>69</sup> Part payment by the surety and his release by the creditor will not bar the creditor's action against the principal for the balance due after deducting the amount paid by the surety.<sup>70</sup>

§ 248. Actions

The application of the general rules of civil actions to suits against a principal have been considered supra §§ 245-247, while their application in cases against both the principal and the sureties are discussed infra §§ 249-281.

Since a creditor may release a surety without affecting the liability of the principal, it is of no concern to the principal what consideration moved the creditor to release the surety.—Mumford v. Solomon, 68 S.E. 1075, 8 Ga.App. 291.

Release after judgment

Judgment creditor after obtaining judgment in solido against principal obligors on note and sureties was entitled to release latter without prejudicing rights against former as to obligation represented by judgment, and such release was not abandonment or extinguishment of principal's liability on obligation represented by judgment.—*Nelson v. ## B. AGAINST SURETY OR PRINCIPAL AND SURETY

§ 249. In General

On default of the principal, suit may be brought at once against the surety; and if the surety is deceased his liability may become that of his estate.

On default of the principal, suit may be brought at once against the surety<sup>71</sup> or one who has assumed liability in place of the original surety<sup>72</sup> unless the obligee has waived the breach or default.<sup>73</sup> Action must be brought on the instrument to which the sureties are parties, and not on the transaction which it secures.<sup>74</sup> Where the creditor has two or more instruments available for the enforcement of his claim, he may resort to either<sup>75</sup> although the parties on one may possess rights against those on another;<sup>76</sup> and an action on one instrument does not affect the right of the creditor or obligee afterward to bring suit on another.<sup>77</sup> Death of the principal does not affect the right of action against the surety.<sup>78</sup> Where the default of a principal has not been established, a bill for an accounting against a surety is not proper.<sup>79</sup> A statute giving a creditor the right to require his debtor to give security where he has become insolvent after contracting the obligation does not apply to sureties so as to give the creditor the right to compel him to secure his obligation.<sup>80</sup>

Against estate of deceased surety. The estate of a deceased surety remains liable for the default of his principal and his liability as surety may, by the terms of his contract, become that of his estate and heirs.<sup>81</sup> Statutes providing that the surety cannot be sued unless joined with the principal or unless judgment has been previously rendered against the principal have been held to apply to the bringing of an action against a deceased surety's estate.<sup>82</sup> Realty of a deceased surety cannot be proceeded against until his liability has been established by a suit on the bond.<sup>83</sup> A judgment recovered against principal and surety jointly bars the right to proceed against the surety's estate separately.<sup>84</sup>

§ 250. Nature and Form of Remedy

Generally, an action at law is the proper means of enforcing a surety's liability, but equity will give relief in a proper case.

An action at law is the proper means of enforcing a claim against sureties,<sup>85</sup> and the only means, in the absence of peculiar conditions vesting jurisdiction in equity,<sup>86</sup> but a court of equity will give relief on a proper case being made out<sup>87</sup> or as an incident to its equity jurisdiction in matters of trust and account,<sup>88</sup> but equity will not relieve where the remedy at law is adequate.<sup>89</sup> Recovery cannot be had in general assumpsit under the money counts, but a surety must be declared against specially.<sup>90</sup>

to his right to recover against the surety.<sup>92</sup> As discussed infra § 287, ordinarily, in the absence of a statute or circumstances under which a court of equity may order it, the creditor or obligee cannot be required to resort to the principal before proceeding against the surety; and the creditor may bring his action against the surety without having proceeded first against the principal<sup>93</sup> and although the amount of the principal's liability has not been established;<sup>94</sup> and his right is not defeated by the fact that the surety, compelled to pay the judgment, has a right of subrogation which will be denied him if no judgment against the principal is rendered.<sup>95</sup>

In the case of a condition imposed on the holder of a bond that he will exhaust all legal remedies against the principal before suing the sureties, it is not violated where suit is brought in the first instance against the latter, the principal being insolvent.<sup>96</sup> In the absence of the provision for completion of the contract by the obligee, such a completion is not a condition precedent to an action by the obligee against a surety for the performance of the contract.<sup>97</sup> So, where the undertaking of the surety is that the principal shall discharge certain claims, his liability accrues on default by the principal, although the claims have not been discharged by the obligee.<sup>98</sup> However, where the liability of the surety is dependent on the establishment of a valid lien on the property of the obligee, the validity of the lien must be established before suit can be brought against the surety.<sup>99</sup> Return of an execution unsatisfied, where otherwise necessary under the terms of the contract to fix the surety's liability, may be excused by a discharge of the principal in bankruptcy.<sup>1</sup> It is not necessary that an arbitration clause in the principal contract should be complied with as a condition to the bringing of an action on the contract of suretyship where the contract of suretyship does not incorporate such provision either expressly or impliedly.<sup>2</sup> Under a statute giving the creditor or obligee the right to sue all or any one of the persons liable, after decease of the principal he may bring his action against the sureties without first verifying his claim and making demand of the personal representative of deceased.<sup>3</sup>
